Brooklyn Blows Up In Ninth, Loses, 11-9

Phils' Rally Puts Crimp in Dodger Flag Hopes; Cards Playing at Night

New York, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—Death came in the afternoon today to the Brooklyn Dodger dreams, and the executioners were the long-tormented Phillies, who put over five runs in a nightmarish ninth for an 11-to-9 victory which all but ended the pennant fight of the gallant men from Flatbush who just blew sky-high.

By losing the 3 hour and 37 minutes struggle, the Dodgers fell a game and a half behind the leading Cardinals, who can take a full two-game margin by beating Cincinnati tonight.

That means the Dodgers now must win all their three remaining games and even so would take the pennant only if St. Louis loses three of its remaining four games.

'Greatest Dodger' Fails

The greatest Dodger of them all, Dixie Walker, failed his teammates in the ninth when he could have made himself a hero of heroes.

He ended the game by flying out to left, leaving the tying runs on the bases.

Rookie Harry Taylor started the Phils off in the ninth by walking Pinchhitter Johnny O'Neil. He struck out Skeeter Newsome, but Johnny Gilbert beat out a hit. Little Vic Lombardi relieved Taylor and Ron Northey greeted him with a single which Walker let go through him, O'Neil scoring on the hit and Gilbert coming home on the error. Johnny Wyrostek walked and Art Herring took over the Dodger mound. Jim Tabor scored Northey with a single and Frank McCormick drew an intentional pass.

Higbe, whose appearance set a new National League record and tied one for the majors for pitchers used by one team in one game, faced Rookie Catcher Dee Moore, who flied to Reiser, scoring Wyrostek. Emil Verban, atoning for two fielding errors in one inning, sent across the last run by scoring Tabor with a single.

Dodger Youngster Ralph Branca, who started, brought a string of 22 scorless innings into the game, but his rival moundsman, Oscar

Cards, Reds Tied In Second, 0-0

St. Louis, Sept. 25.—The St. Louis Cardinals, seeking to virtually eliminate the Dodgers from the 1946 pennant race, were tied, 0-0, with the Reds after two innings here tonight. Murray Dickson of the Cards and Bucky Walters of the Reds were the opposing moundsmen.

One Traffic Code Urged For Pan-Am. Highway

Mexico City, Sept. 25 (AP).—Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, administrator of the United States Federal Works Agency, today urged a single traffic code for the Pan-American Highway, which he said would be finished as far south as Panama in a year or two.

He told the International Association of Chiefs of Police at its fifty-third annual conference here he suggested formulation of a code so that the tourist would not "find the rules of the motoring game changed every time he enters a new police jurisdiction."

Paraguay Suspends Communist Activities

Asuncion, Paraguay, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—Communist Party activities were ordered suspended for one month by the ministry of interior today, on the grounds that the party had "not collaborated as a legitimate opposition."

The action followed charges that Communists had led an abortive military coup Friday against the government of President Higinio Morinigo.

Union Meeting Stops When Girl Drops In

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—The business meeting of Local 14, AFL engineers union, was interrupted today when a lady dropped in—right through the skylight.

Cynthia Buckham, 18, said it was unintentional. She was on the roof taking pictures and absent-mindedly sat on the glass to focus her camera. She was treated at a hospital for cuts and bruises.

A 3-year-old boy was crushed to death on a Washington street yesterday and Leon Arnold, pioneer transportation executive, was killed in nearby Virginia when his station wagon struck a two-ton garbage truck.

The District victim was Michael Joseph Speakes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Speakes, 74 New York ave. ne. Police said the child dashed from between two parked cars on O st., at the rear of his home into the path of the car. The driver, Chauncey W. Whitt, jr., 27, of 3722 Hayes st. ne., will appear before a coroner's inquest.

Warned of Danger

John Goldsmith, a filling station attendant, said the boy and Buddy Lee Jegar, 4, of 70 New York ave. ne., had been playing around the station and that he had cautioned them against traffic danger. The last warning was made about a half hour before the child was struck, he said.

In nearby Maryland, two Prince Georges county policemen were slightly injured when their patrol car struck a pole after being forced off the road by a truck at Baltimore ave. and 40th st. The truck, which they said passed through a red light, failed to stop.

The injured men are Horace King, 29 and Joseph R. Hill, 27.

Arnold, who was 69, founder and former president of the Washington, Virginia & Maryland Coach Co., died in the wreckage of his station wagon after colliding headon with the truck on Lee Highway near Merrifield, three miles west of Falls Church, Va.

Says Arnold Car Swerved

Emory Mayhugh, 38, of Manassas, Va., driver of the truck which was en route to Manassas with a load of District garbage, told police the Arnold car appeared to swerve suddenly to the left directly in front of this truck. Mayhugh was given a summons to appear in Fairfax Trial Justice Court next Wednesday. Neither Mayhugh or two other occupants of the truck were injured.

A native of Washington, Mr. Arnold launched his business career as operator of a packing house for the Cudahy Packing Co. in 1909. In 1912 he established his own slaughterhouse and was president of the National Hotel Supply Co. of Washington at the time of his death.

His first transportation venture was as president and general manager of the Washington-Colonial Beach Steamboat Co. By 1921 he was president of the Washington Rapid Transit Co., which operated a 16th st. bus line. The line at one time operated the only double-decker buses ever used here.

Formed Arnold Lines In '25

In December of 1925 he disposed of his holdings in the Rapid Transit Co. to form the Arnold Lines. Later he also sold the Washington Motor Coach Co., organized five months before to operate the first bus lines between Washington, Baltimore, Annapolis and Atlantic City.

He maintained controlling interest of the Arnold Lines until June of this year when he sold all of his interest to Manuel J. Davis, a Wash-

London, Sept. 25 (AP).—A Greek Embassy spokesman declared today that heavy fighting in the mountains of northern Greece was "an invasion of subversive elements from Albania and Yugoslavia with the connivance of the two governments."

Both British and Greek government officials referred to the fighting as a small scale "civil war," with the Slavic states backing leftist insurgents and Britain supplying arms to the Greek government.

Greek sources charged that Yugoslavia and Albania were furnishing military supplies to the rebels, and a spokesman for the British Foreign Office said there was "no reason to doubt" this allegation.

Spokesmen for both Greece and Turkey, describing their countries as barriers to Slavic expansion in the strategic eastern Mediterranean, spoke of a new war of nerves inspired by nations in the Russian sphere of influence.

"Invasion" Seen Probable

Allied military leaders in Athens have said they would not be surprised at some sort of an "invasion" before winter weather makes fighting almost impossible in the mountains.

Disorders centered in the border region bitterly disputed at the Paris Peace Conference—the bastion between the Russian sphere of Europe and troubled Greece itself. The rebels are composed principally of groups opposed to the imminent return of King George II from wartime exile in Britain.

Strict secrecy was imposed on the movement of the King, called home by a better than 2 to 1 majority in the recent plebiscite. The King is expected to depart for his homeland tomorrow or Friday.

Reports Vary On Fighting in Southern Iran

Tehran, Sept. 25 (AP).—Tehran newspapers carried conflicting dispatches tonight on fighting around the Persian Gulf port of Bushire between the government garrison and forces of the rebellious Oashqai tribesmen, who were variously reported to have penetrated the government defenses and to have been held off by the troops.

Scattered and unconfirmed newspaper reports on the uprising in the southern Iran province of Fars, which the government has promised to put down "with an iron fist," gave this picture of the situation:

The garrison at Borazjans was under attack by tribesmen and was still resisting.

Government Forces Arrive

The towns of Abadeh and Shiraz remained calm, and telegraph communications between Tehran and Shiraz were uninterrupted.

The newspaper Etelaat reported "government forces arrived yesterday in Abadeh from Isfahan, and are proceeding to Shiraz."

The Central government announced a delegation flew today to Shiraz to discuss the situation with representatives of Fars Province.

Propaganda Minister Prince Mozaffar Firouz told a news conference last night that "instructions have been given to military commanders in Fars Province to resist the rebels to the last man and bullet."

General Zahedi, commander in chief in Fars, declared martial law.

It was officially announced that Premier Ahmed Qavam had replied to a lost of unspecified demands of the Qashqai tribesmen, telling them he would examine their case but

WAA Official Suspended In Truck Deal

Bostwick Drew Up Approval of Sale For $600,000 Less Than Agency Price

By Dillard Stokes
Post Reporter

The War Assets Administration last night suspended Walton H. Bostwick, the key official who drew up approval of a sale of trucks for $600,000 below the WAA price.

Bostwick told The Post his chiefs were making a mountain out of a molehill.

Acting as agents, the Hallicrafters Co. of Chicago sold 200 or more trucks that belonged to the Government for $4500 apiece last fall. Months later, the memorandum approving the deal turned up in the WAA files. The House Surplus Committee has been trying all week to find out how it got there.

Bostwick Dictated It

After a line of high officials said they had no idea how this happened, a former WAA stenographer told the committee yesterday that she typed the memorandum. Bostwick dictated it in April, she said, but told her to date it last December 18. At that time the truck deal was being made.

Bostwick admitted the memorandum was his work, but he said he did not use the last year's date with the purpose of fooling anybody about when the memorandum was drawn up.

Told to Look Into Deal

Bostwick said that he was told to look into the truck deal by either Robert K. McCurdy, former WAA electronics chief, or by Harold L. Naylor, electronics executive. When he found that the WAA files showed the price of the trucks was $7500 each he called J. Gerald Mayer, the Hallicrafters lawyer in Washington.

Bostwick said Mayer told him the $4500 price was agreed on by three WAA officials, Naylor, William Foss, former electronics chief, and Earl Atkinson. Without asking any of them about it, he said, he got up a memorandum to that effect and placed it in the files.

Brig. Gen. James A. Mollison found it there when he took over the electronics sales office a few weeks ago. He told the committee the Hallicrafters' deal was the sort of dishonesty that made the electronics task a dirty job.

Besides selling the trucks, Hallicrafters acted as Government agents for sale of most of the radio and telephone equipment in the Chicago signal depot. One of their officers—Dwight E. Gustafson—was given the right to sign papers as a Government man.

Edward W. Dillon of the WAA told the committee yesterday he knew this was improper and against the law, but he said he was acting

WAA Employe Seized On Bribery Charge

St. Louis, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Federal Bureau of Investigation announced tonight the arrest of a $4000-a-year employe of the regional War Assets Administration here on a charge of accepting a $200 bribe for the purpose of obtaining influence in the procurement of $4000 worth of scarce electrical equipment.

Herbert Moss, acting head of the St. Louis FBI office, said agents took into custody Ernest Adolphus Gunkel, 47-year-old salesman for the WAA here, after he accepted $200 in marked bills from Malcolm C. Hulvard, partner in an Atlanta, Ga., electrical appliance jobbing firm.

Moss said Hulvard, a 24-year-old veteran, complained to the FBI at Atlanta that he made an unsuccessful trip to St. Louis in August to obtain some scarce electrical copper wire and conductors and later was visited in the Southern city by Gunkel, who was alleged to have said "that for $200 things could be arranged."

Gunkel was held in jail pending arraignment.

Move to End Power Strike Progresses

Union Group Agrees To Urge Settlement As Paralysis Hits Pittsburgh Plants

Pittsburgh, Sept. 25 (AP).—While industrial palsy hit in the Nation's steel capital, a possibility of settlement arose late today in an unparalleled, two-day-old power strike marked by a dramatic tug-of-war between the judiciary and labor over labor's right to strike a public utility.

As additional thousands of workers were made idle by the walkout and its resulting curtailment of street car transportation, a nine-man union strike committee announced in court its willingness to recommend that 3500 employes of the Duquesne Light Co. end the strike—in compliance with an order of the Allegheny County Common Pleas Court.

The committee said it would recommend that the employes, at a mass meeting tonight, accept a new company offer to settle their long-argued contract dispute. Details of the offer were unannounced.

Temporarily Freed

The court temporarily freed the committeemen, explaining it was giving them this opportunity to purge themselves of contempt of court incurred by the committee's failure to end the strike by 9 a. m. (Eastern Standard Time) today.

The court had handed down its strike-end order yesterday—and sentenced to jail for one year one union leader who refused to obey it. Cited for contempt of court, he is George L. Mueller, president of the striking Independent Association of Duquesne Light Co. employes.

Continuing the stern tone it has adopted throughout the strike litigation, the court directed the committeemen to notify President Judge Harry H. Rowand "by no later than 10 p. m." (Eastern Standard Time) tonight of the union membership vote results.

The committeemen were instructed further to report to court by 8:30 a. m. tomorrow whether their settlement efforts were "sufficient to eliminate the contempt charges." No mention of the jailed Mueller was made.

Sympathy Wave Develops

Meanwhile, a strike sympathy wave developed among unionists perturbed over the court's injunction prohibiting the strike and by the summary incarceration of Mueller.

Unionists asserted there is no law to make men work. Noting that the issue has never been decided by the United States Supreme Court, both CIO and AFL unions sought to join the unaffiliated utility union in the case.

Opposing the union view, the city argued labor had no right to "strike against the people" and "endanger public health and safety."

The strike sympathy wave began among CIO employes of the Jones Laughlin Steel Corp. By the day's end 8000 of the firm's 12,000 workers in two Pittsburgh plants were idle.

Clo employes of the big Westinghouse Electric Corp. plant in East Pittsburgh called a meeting of 16,500 members for tomorrow afternoon "if Mueller is still in jail." The executive board of the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Union at the plant also proposed a general CIO strike unless Mueller were released.

Other provisions of the September 9 injunction studied by unionists were those against picketing and spending union funds in furtherance of the walkout.

The injunction did not overlook management. It ordered officials of U. S. Reduces Demands on Italy by 75%

Conference Approves Plan to Postpone Action on Colonies

Paris, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—The United States announced today that it was prepared to cut its property damage claims against Italy by 75 per cent as the Peace Conference approved the four-power formula to postpone disposing of Italian colonies for one year.

U. S. Delegate Willard Thorp told the Italian Economic Commission that the United States had reversed its original demand for full compensation for the property of its nationals in Italy damaged during the war and was willing to accept as little as one fourth.

Russia had objected to the demand for full compensation and had suggested a figure of one third.

Thorp estimated that American property in Italy eligible for compensation amounted to 110 million dollars. A total of 444 million dollars of property of United Nations nationals in Italy was damaged to the extent of 100 million dollars, he estimated.

After the American announcement the commission voted down by a tie vote of nine to nine a British proposal calling for full compensation. Chairman Sir Josef Bhore of India ruled that the principle of full compensation was lost because of the absence of a majority.

The Italian Political Commission also voted down two amendments in adopting the Big Four formula to postpone disposition of Italian colonies.

As the article on Italian colonies now stands, Italy will surrender immediately its sovereignty and the British will continue military occupation and administration until the Big Four decide on disposition.

Only if the four powers fail to reach agreement will the problem of the future status be referred to the United Nations.

Passing from the 3-day debate on colonies, the Political Commission under Anglo-American leadership rejected 9 to 8 with three abstentions a Soviet bloc amendment to include in the Italian treaty an article obliging Italy to purge herself of fascism.

The amendment was opposed by United States Delegate James Dunn, who contended that a "new, democratic Italy" already has

Closing of Belgrade Library Threatens New Row With Tito

A new American dispute with Yugoslavia is in the making—this time over an abrupt Yugoslav government order closing the State Department's reference library and information service in Belgrade.

Official confirmation of the Yugoslav order came yesterday from Ambassador Richard C. Patterson, but the State Department was awaiting further details before deciding on its reply.

This brings to three the number of pending diplomatic disputes with Marshal Tito's government. The others are over the indemnity to be paid for shooting down two American planes last month, and over the alleged "rough handling" of six Yugoslav soldiers by American guards near Trieste.

According to despatches from Belgrade, the Yugoslav Government made formal complaint against the distribution of bulletins "against Tito's government," including 3000 copies of the text of the American note recognizing Tito's government "with reservations."

In particular the Yugoslavs complained about the alleged distribution of mimeographed copies of articles from the Los Angeles Examiner, written by Eric L. Pridonoff, a former Embassy commercial attache, which were "a slander and grave insult to the people and government."

An Associated Press despatch from Belgrade quoted Richard Breece, director of the United States information service, as explaining that copies of the Pridonoff article were made by an American citizen who asked permission to use the USIS mimeograph ma-

Action Points To Party Cleavage on Price Issue

House Democratic Leader Demands 60-Day Suspension So People Can Eat

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Government officials tangled last night on what to do about the meat famine sweeping the country.

Democratic House Leader John W. McCormack of Boston demanded that OPA controls over scarce foods be suspended to give "our hospitals and our citizens" enough to eat.

McCormack's telegram to OPA Administrator Paul A. Porter urged that "price control on meat and scarce food products should be suspended 60 days."

He told newsmen in Boston that he had discussed the matter with President Truman and other officials.

Cleavage Is Indicated

His action indicated a cleavage among Administration leaders over the price control issue, in the midst of a congressional campaign.

Gov. Maurice J. Tobin of Massachusetts, backing up McCormack's demands, called upon Federal authorities to "seize meat slaughtering plants and also institute immediate steps to purchase hogs and cattle."

"If such action is not taken," Tobin said, "then I call for abolition of all ceilings on meat products."

To still further complicate the situation for Government officials, the War Department last night told the meat industry that it must have 15 million pounds of meat each week for the armed forces, warned that it will invoke its requisitioning powers, if necessary, to get it.

One Fourth of Total

The 15-million pounds a week sought is about one fourth the total meat production in the country according to Agriculture Department official reports. Last week total production of meat under Federal inspection totaled 70 million pounds, and the week previous was 60 million.

Another New England Governor, Republican Raymond E. Baldwin of Connecticut, added his appeal

D. C. Meat Shortage Continues to Grow

Steaks and chops moved a little further away from the tables of the average Washington family yesterday as meat packers throughout the Nation continued to lay off employes because of the critical meat shortage.

A Capitol Hill restaurant, admitting defeat, sent its employes home yesterday and became the first restaurant in the city to close up shop because of the shortage.

A large "closed—no meat" sign and a locked door greeted customers of the C & L Food Shop, 11 B st. se.

District Commissioners, seeking meat for the 7000 persons in the city's welfare and penal institutions, turned to the Department of Agriculture for help.

District Purchasing Officer Roland M. Brennan has prepared a letter to Secretary of Agriculture Anderson requesting that the District be given top priority on Agriculture's surplus stocks of canned and processed meats.

Some Fresh Meat Bought

Brennan said that he negotiated purchase of enough fresh meat yesterday to meet the needs of the 7000 persons in the city's welfare and penal institutions for the next four or five days.

The city is seeking help from Agriculture because the purchase of meat substitutes has proved too costly, Brennan said.

"But no matter how the situation turns, I will never purchase any horse meat for the city," Brennan stated emphatically.

Horse meat has been frequently

Parley Set On Bank Aid For Trade

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter

Top Government officials will meet this afternoon with a committee of leading private industrialists and bankers to enlist their help in meeting some of the problems of American foreign trade and world reconstruction.

The committee, headed by Winthrop W. Aldrich of the Chase National Bank, was appointed by President Truman last June to advise the Government. Its membership represents an enormous aggregation of private financial resources and probably the world's largest pool of industrial and engineering skill.

Among the subjects on its agenda will be:

1. The extent to which private banks in this country can absorb some of the Export-Import Bank's securities, thus lightening the load on the Export-Import Bank.

2. The extent to which private banks here can absorb the much greater amounts to be floated by the International Bank, which will rely for 80 per cent of its financing upo nthe sale of its securities, and;

3 The possibility of industrial loans to enable foreign countries to buy American equipment for reconstruction and development.

Group Studies Agenda

The Aldrich committee met at the Hotel Statler yesterday to study the agenda. It will meet tomorrow at the Theasury with the National Advisory Council, headed by Secretary Snyder, which attempts to coordinate the Government's foreign economic activities.

Their meeting will precede by 24 hours the start of a week-long meeting in Washington of the Board of Governors of the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

The International Bank is not yet ready to make any sizeable loans, although it has before it two preliminary applications. One is from France, for 500 million dollars, and one from Czechoslovagia for 350 million dollars.

In addition, Poland has announced its intention of seeking a big credit from the bank to finance its three-year reconstruction program.

Bank Fund Small

Th ebank now has only 143 million dollars in gold and dollars, representing the first two per cent of its contributions. Within the next three months it will have called for the full 20 per cent of its resources which will come from contributions from the member governments.

The rest of its $7,700,000,000 of resources, however, will come from the sale of its bonds. At present it is not able to sell its debentures because insurance companies in this country are not yet legally authorized to buy them, and savings banks outside New York are not yet eligible.

In other words, banking regulations in the various States will have to be changed before the bank can start its vitally important work of international lending.

The baord of governors will act on four new applications for membership, from Turkey, Syria, Lebanon and Italy. The United States Government is strongly supporting Italy's application for membership in both the bank and the fund.

Private Aid Needed

Until the bank can begin its lending, however, foreign governments will have to depend upon the Export-Import Bank and private lenders in this country. This is what gives particular significance to the meeting of the Aldrich committee at this time.

Members of the Aldrich committee are:

Chairman, Winthrop W. Aldrich, board chairman of Chase National Bank, New York; Champ Carry, president, Pullman Standard Car Manufacturing Co., Chicago; Walter J. ummings, board chairman, Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Co., Chicago; L. M. Giannini, president, Bank of America, San Francisco; Paul Hoffman, president, Studebaker Corp., South Bend, Ind.; Edward Hopkinson, jr., Drexel & Co., Philadelphia.

Fowler McCormick, board chairman, International Harvester Co., Chicago; Irving S. Olds, board chairman, United States Steel Corp.; Harper H. Pease, president, New Britain Machine Co., New Britain, Conn.; Gordon Renschler, board chairman, National City Bank, New York; A. W. Robertson, board chairman, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Pittsburgh; Tom K. Smith, board chairman, Boatmen's National Bank, St. Louis.

OWMR Advisory Unit Meets Again Today In Formula Search

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Advisory board members of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion considering the possibility of a new wage stabilization policy, yesterday ended a second meeting on the subject, but made no statement of progress.

The group is to meet again this morning, but prospects appeared poor for agreement on a new formula under which the Government could maintain wage equilibrium.

Both major labor organizations, the AFL and CIO, are opposed to further Government control of wages and presumably would not join in any recommendation for continuing them in a virile form.

William Green, president of the AFL, and Philip Murray, president of the CIO, are known to be opposed to continuation of the Wage Stabilization Board.

The CIO in particular, it is believed, takes the position that the Government has shown it cannot and will not support a stabilization formula. It manifested its inability to back up its present formula, this argument runs, during the recent maritime strike, when Stabilization Director John R. Steelman "caved" before AFL seamen's demands for increases above the present pattern.

In yesterday's meeting and in that of the day before, labor representatives are understood to have taken the position that since prices are no longer actually stabilized, it is impossible and unjust to attempt to hold wages at a fixed level.

In addition to the wage stabilization problem, the board members are supposed to undertake consideration of price, productivity, tax and profit policy, but so far have been unable to attack the issues in concrete terms, it was believed.

The group will continue to "explore" the problems, it was indicated, with a view to reporting next Monday to the full Advisory Board on what courses of action seem possible or desirable.

Soviet Teachers Urged to Raise Ideological Levels

Moscow, Sept. 25 (AP).—Izvestia today quoted A. G. Kalashnikov, minister of education of the Russian Socialist Federative Soviet Republic (RSFSR), as saying school teachers must raise the level of their ideological and political knowledge to accomplish their task in Communist education.

He said the taste of many teachers for ideological improvement had become dulled.

Izvestia also announced groups of students from Slav countries would undergo courses of study in Soviet higher educational institutions in Moscow, Leningrad and other cities. Bulgarian students arrived Monday, it said, and groups from Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia are expected soon.

Solemn Rites Mark Burial Of 5 Fliers

The bodies of five American airmen killed in Yugoslavia were buried together yesterday beneath two towering oak trees in Arlington National Cemetery.

Shot down on August 19, their broken bodies had rested for an uneasy time in a common grave at Kropovnik before being recovered and flown back to this country by special plane.

Yesterday, the five flag-draped coffins were borne from the crypt near the Unknown Soldier's Tomb, where they had rested since their arrival, to the spired Fort Myer Chapel fr oservices conducted by Protestant and Catholic chaplains.

Significantly, the solemn quiet of the services was broken once when a low-flying transport winged overhead.

Kosavonic Statement

Yugoslavian Ambassador Sava N. Kosavonic expressed his "personal sorrow" in a statement issued later.

"I should have liked to attend the funeral services," he said. "In doing so I know that I would have expressed also the sorrow and great regrets of the people and government and of my country, and our feelings of sympathy for the bereaved families.

"But," the Ambassador concluded, "no representative of my country was asked to attend. Perhaps my presence only would have added to the grief of the families. By my order the flag of Yugoslavia flew at halfstaff at the embassy today.

From the chapel, led by the Army Band beating a funeral cadence on muffled drums, the procession of five hearses, followed by a 90-man honor guard from Fort Myer's 703d Military Police Battalion, relatives and friends, and several hundred others, threaded its way through the historic cemetery.

High Officers Attend

Located in one of the oldest sections of the cemetery, the grave stands near another common grave where the bodies of seven unknown American sailors are buried who died in the sinking of the submarine F-4 in Honolulu Harbor, March 25, 1915.

This was the first mass burial in the cemetery since then.

The anonymous coffins were laid side by side. In them were Capt. Richard H. Claeys, of St. Charles, Ill.; Capt. Harold F. Schriber, of New Albany, Ind.; Capt. Glen H. Freestone, of Burley, Idaho; Corp. Matthew W. Comko, of Monessen, Pa., and Corp. Chester J. Lower, of Enfield, N. H.

Some 30 relatives sat on chairs nearby.

On the opposite side of the grave, standing at attention, were many high-ranking officers from the War Department, including W. Stuart, Symington, Assistant Secretary of War; Gen. Carl Spaatz, commanding the Army Air Forces; Gen. William Handy, who represented General Eisenhower, and Brig. Gen. Claude B. Ferenbaugh, commanding the Military District of Washington.

Comrades Stand By

Along another side of the flower-banked grave stood 50 picked officers and men representing a cross-section of the Air Forces. Many were comrades of the dead airmen.

Most of the mothers and wives were composed until the sad, clear sound of taps floated over the graves.

When the traditional three volleys of shots had been fired, the men who had flown back to this country the plane carrying the bodies stood by each coffin to receive the covering flag and deliver it to the family.

in a telegram to Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson.

He declared a "desperate meat shortage in Connecticut hospitals" and urged that special slaughtering quotas be established for such institutions and that meat from Government sources such as the Army and Navy be made available to them.

Meanwhile two industry advisory committees of OPA were preparing to petition Secretary Anderson for removal of meat controls. They were the beef industry committee which has just ended a two-day conference on the subject, and the restaurant industry committee.

Court Action Threatened

In announcing a meeting of the latter committee, J. E. Frawley, chairman of the American Hotel Association, indicated that unless relief was granted woon from the recent order rolling back meat menu price items to June 30, the industry would resort to court action.

mentioned recently, but District Health Department food inspectors said they had not been notified by any local meat dealers that they intended to begin selling horse meat for human consumption. Such meat would be subject to the same Federal inspection as other meats.

At Gallinger Hospital, Dr. Alvin R. Sweeney said the hospital was "desperate" for meat proteins. A check of the city's private hospitals disclosed that critical shortages exist in all but one.

Providence Getting Enough

Providence Hospital reported it is getting ample meat supplies for its patients. Officials at Providence said it is getting its meat from the Southern Hotel Supply Co., with which it has done business for several years.

While meat dealers in Washington could see no hope for an increase in supplies in the near future, the situation in Baltimore grew worse yesterday.

Five hundred additional packing house workers in Baltimore were "furloughed," leaving only about 800 of a normal 2300 employes at work.

Baltimore's Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin, Republican candidate for governor of Maryland, sent a telegram to OPA Director Paul Porter here urging a let-up in price controls on meat.

"Inmates of hospitals and other institutions, working people and the general public are forced to endure a meat shortage while cattle, sheep and hogs are more plentiful than ever in this country," McKeldin said.

"OPA should withdraw from the meat market and allow the law of supply and demand to break the black market and restore normal conditions."

Wild Train Wrecks Broad St. Station In Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Sept. 24 (AP).—A runaway train bolted through its bumper block in Broad Street Station today as it backed into the station and rolled 80 feet across the concrete floor.

No one was in the path of the cars, and noone was injured, Pensylvania Railroad authorities said.

The train left a mass of wreckage in its wake. It cut tracks on the floor, crashed through a wooden gate, clipped two steel pillars, crumpled brick and carried off some steel-laced partitioning.

To an accompanying din which reminded clerks downstairs of a series of steam pipe explosions, the train narrowly missed the station restaurant and barbershop and ended its madcap trip wedged in a brick archway.

New York, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—The Albert Einstein Foundation for Higher Learning, announced today that Dr. Israel Goldstein has resigned as president because he and Einstein, for whom the foundation was named were unable to agree.

Goldstein said that they differed on matters "of public relations and faculty selection" and that he believed the scientist's association with the project was "indispensable to its success."

U. S. Accused Of Distorting Ship Profits

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

The Maritime Commission and the General Accounting Office were charged with "deliberately misleading" the public on wartime shipbuilding profits in testimony before the House Merchant Marine Committee yesterday.

John A. McCone, president of the California Shipbuilding Corp., joned Henry J. Kaiser and other shipbuilders in denouncing Maritime Commission figures made public by the committee as reflecting an entirely false picture of profits in the industry.

After trying in vain for 2½ days to show that Kaiser's wartime gains were exhorbitant, the committee excused the portly industrialist, and turned a perfunctory eye toward other companies.

The soft-spoken president of "Calship," who was commended by all the members of the committee on his precise mastery of all the details of his concern, declared:

Reports Mislead People

"This I do know. When either the Maritime Commission or the General Accounting Office report to this country, in such a way that it is spread through press and radio, the fact that shipbuilders garned certain profits, and don't include proper figures for taxes, renegotiation costs and unreimbursable expenses, the reporting authority deliberately misleads the people of this country.

"I resent it very much.

"If a certified public accountant, reporting on the affairs of a public corporation, reported as many half-truths, he would violate a very sacred obligation and be disallowed from further practice in every State."

Before the hearings opened this week, the Maritime Commission furnished the committee and GAO a table purported to show the cost of Government furnished yards and equipment, the estimated profits made by the shipbuilder and the capital investment of the shipyard operator.

The table was sent with a letter from Maritime Charman W. W. Smith, pointing out that final settlement had not been made with respect to many contracts.

Profits Called Actual

"However the profits are substantially actual," Smith wrote. "It should also be borne in mind that certain costs have been incurred by contractors which are not reimbursable or allowable by the Commission and must be met out of earned profits under the contracts."

He added, "the amounts of disallowances are relatively small compared to earned profits."

The shipbuilders, from Kaiser on, showed the committee how taxes, renegotiation and so forth sent the paper profits plummeting downward.

The shipbuilders also challenged the commission's report with respect to their invested capital.

For one thing, the figures of the Maritime Commission as to actual capital invested were not correct, McCone and others maintained. For another, the real capital of construction and engineering firms is in its trained personnel which provides the management skill to build ships, they said.

Clarity Sought

Representative Alvin F. Weichel (R., Ohio) found it hard to understand why the building and engineering firms figured the per cent of their profits on the over-all cost of the job rather than the capital invested.

The last witness of the day, Edwin L. Jones, secretary-treasurer of the J. A. Jones Construction Co., tried to make it clear.

"If I build you a house," Jones stated, "I base my charge on the overall cost of the job, not on how much money my firm has in the bank."

Weichel asked McCone over and over again what the shipbuilders were paid for since the Government owned the yards, furnished the equipment, and paid for the labor.

"We were paid to build ships," McCone said.

Tito's Compliance Leads Dockhands To Resume Work

New York, Sept. 25 (INS).—International Longshoremen's Association President Joseph P. Ryan announced tonight that loading of ships with relief supplies for Yugoslavia will be resumed tomorrow.

Ryan sai dthe ILA had received a telegram from Acting Secretary of State Clayton deeclaring that Yugoslavia is complying with United States demands for indemnity in the shooting down of American flyers and hence shipment of supplies of Marshal Tito's government should not be stopped.

The longshoremen have since September 5 refused to load ships with UNRRA relief supplies destined for Yugoslavia, contending that that country had not complied satisfactorily with American demands for rectification.

Ryan said Clayton informed the union that four of the U. S. demands upon Yugoslavia have been met, including indemnity to the families of the five flyers killed August 19 and the U. S. Government still is pressing for indemnity for the two planes shot down.

MPs Aid in Seizing 200 Paris Prostitutes

Paris, Sept. 25 (AP).—More than 200 prostitutes were arrested last night in a sweeping raid by the French police working with the American military police after 40 houses of prostitution had been closed on Monday.

Following a campaign launched by Marthe Richard, the constituent assembly passed a law last April 13 outlawing prostitution.

Successful Debut

Negro Actor Dons Make-up In White Role

Boston, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—Canada Lee opened a new field to Negro actors today by donning white makeup and portraying a white character for the first time in the history of the American stage.

So effective was the makeup that it was difficult to tell that Lee was a Negro when he made his debut as the villainous Daniel de Bosola in the seventeenth century melodrama, "The Duchess of Malfi."

Lee used a special white-paste and a wig helped create the illusion that he was white. The paste, never before used in the theater, has been applied medically to cover burns and disfiguring marks.

"Up to now," Lee said, "Negro actors have been relegated to funny roles. Roles that make fun of a whole race. I htae that. This can prove that art is not limited by color. It can open up whole new fields to the Negro actor."

Elizabeth Bergner, star of the show, agreed with Lee that wider possibilities were now available to Negro actors.

Miss Bergner and her husband, Producer Paul Czinner, were responsible for giving Lee the role. When McKay Morris withdrew from the part, Miss Bergner and Czinner believed Lee the only actor available who could do a competent and successful job at short notice.

Allies Study Plan To Repudiate Big Debt of Germany

Berlin, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—The Big Four occupation powers may repudiate the Third Reich's 400 billion mark debt and issue an entirely new currency, American officials revealed today.

The four-power Allied Control Council, they added, are considering other sweeping changes in the German fiscal set-up all of which are listed as "top secret." It was hinted that dollar credits would be established for Germany.

Officials emphasized that debt repudiation would not apply to occupation costs but would be aimed at controlling two main inflation factors—the huge debt and increased currency circulation.

They rejected, however, the idea that uncontrolled printing of Allied marks by the Russians had any noticeable effect on the general situation, since Allied marks are only a small percentage of those in circulation.

Secret Terms Of Red-Nazi Pact May Be Revealed

New York, Sept. 25 (INS).—Newsweek magazine declares in its September 30 issue reaching the newsstands tomorrow that Secretary of State Byrnes has ordered publication of the captured records of the German foreign office for the entire period of Nazi control.

The magazine states that Byrnes decided on the "drastic measure" after much reflection on Russian-American relations. It adds:

"The documents, of course, will disclose to th eworld the secret terms of the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact ,which partitioned Poland in 1939 and neutralized Soviet Russia the following year while its treaty partner, Germany, overran western Europe."

Group to Name 5 For Charter Board

The names of the Montgomery County Charter Committee's five candidates for election to the Charter Board will be announced at a meeting Monday.

The candidates will seek office in the November election as the result of a petition filed by the charter committee. The County Commissioners earlier declined to nominate their candidates for the board. Other nominations may be made by petitioning citizens. At least 2000 signatures are required.

The Monday nigh tsession will be held at 8:15 in the Woodside School, Silver Spring.

Ceilings Lifted From Foreign Autos, Cameras

Foreign-made automobiles and cameras, along with dozens of other imported items, were freed of price control yesterday.

OPA, in announcing the action, said the import items "are of minor significance in the Nation's economy."

There have been some sales of small British automobiles in this country. In prewar days the United States imported many cameras from Germany.

The full list of the "main lines" suspended from price control was given by OPA as: imported automobiles, furniture, motorcycles, bicycles, cameras and photographic equipment, industrial machinery, chinaware, glassware and household utensils and appliances.

The agency stressed that the action has no effect on any of these items made in the United States.

There now remain only eight categories of imported goods still subject to price ceilings fixed in the OPA's revised maximum import price regulation. These are: wearing apparel, wearing apparel accessories, luggage, household textile commodities such as sheets and towels, foods, unfinished industrial materials, building materials and textile grey or finished fabrics.

OPA also suspended price controls on 42 specific items that come within the eight categories generally still under price ceilings.

In another action, OPA exempted sales of packaged fuel by both producers and distributors from control. It defined packaged fuel as "coal or coke screenings compressed with a binder and sealed in paper." It said the fuel is not an important item in either living or business costs.

CIO Lays Attacks On Organizers to 'Some Employers'

Atlanta, Sept. 25 (AP).—Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO's southern organizing drive, charged in a statement today that 17 union organizers "have been assaulted" since the CIO started its membership drive in the South in May.

"Our general counsel, Jerome Cooper of Birmingham, has begun an investigation with the view of prosecuting certain employers on charges of conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States," Bittner said.

"We do not intend to stand idly by and allow anybody to harm our representatives . . . one of the worst things about this situation is that law enforcement officers in some towns are working in close collusion with employers or have become suddenly blind to the beating of organizers and union members."

Stalin's Statement

STALIN'S STATEMENT, which has been given the utmost publicity by the Soviet government, is quite plainly addressed as much to the Russian people and to Communists throughout the world as it is to the rest of us. The indications are reasonably clear that Stalin spoke out as he did and when he did because he judges the moment has come when it is both necessary and opportune to alter somewhat the line of Soviet policy.

LIPPMANN

FOR HIS OWN people and for the Communist faithful the crucial point is his denial, though it has been for many months the main theme of Soviet propaganda that the "capitalist encirclement" is possible, even if "the ruling cricles of Great Britain" desired it, "which, however, we cannot affirm." This surprising but authoritative denial must be intended to prepare the minds of the Communists and their sympathizers for a change in Soviet tactics.

For the Western nations the crucial point is the assurance given to Mr. Wallace that, despite M. Molotov's declaration of July, he is not now bidding for German support against Western Europe. But these remarks and others in a similar vein are not exclusively addressed to Mr. Wallace and his followers here. They are addresed to Europe, and especially to the fact that British opinion has been evolving rapidly and remarkably since the Bevin-Vishinsky encounters of last winter and the Fulton speech.

A lot of water has flowed under the bridge since official British opinion regarded it as immoral for Americans to think that the United States might be a mediating power in Europe and Asia: The leading organs of British opinion, having seen the consequences to the world when no strong power is the mediator, have quite naturally and quite properly remembered that mediation is necessary if there is to be peace, and moreover that it is the historic role of Britain, one in which her public men have long and deep experience, and that in collaboration with as much of Europe as can be united, it may be a practical role.

THE SIGNIFICANCE of this development in Britain and on the Continent is not yet appreciated, I believe, in the United States, probably because it has not yet been adequately reported or given its true value as news.

It is no accident, I venture to think, that Stalin, who for so long has almost ostentatiously treated Britain as a minor power, should now make an important statement of policy through a British medium. He is undoubtedly aware of the fact that whereas American opinion has been freezing up, British opinion is unfreezing and becoming much more fluid.

THE CHANGE in European opinion provides an opportunity, which Stalin means to use, for some change in the line of Soviet policy. But there remains the deeper question as to why he thinks the time has come to prepare the Russian people and the Communists abroad for a change in the Soviet line, and what that change is likely to be.

The chief reason for the change is that the United States is now acting effectively, indeed decisively, to restore the balance of power at the salient point, which is the Eastern Mediterranean, where no Russian statesman dares to ignore the event. The United States has taken an unequivocal position on Turkey and the Straits, and American sea-and-air power is systematically adapting itself to the change-over from the Pacific, for which it was designed, to the Atlantic, of which the Mediterranean is an extension. Stalin understands the meaning of this American action, and there is little doubt that he is more deeply impressed by this American action than by all the tough words that have been uttered. In most of our dealings with Russia we have spoken toughly and done nothing. But in our Turkish policy and the naval program which supports it, we have obeyed the injunction to speak softly but to carry a big stick.

THIS IS THE policy, judging by the acute sensitiveness of the Russian propaganda, which has caused Moscow to realize that a negotiated adjustment of some kind must be sought, and, moreover, that the way to it is through Britain. For while Britain undoubtedly welcomes the American action in the Eastern Mediterranean, while British-American military collaboration is, happily, firmer than it was, the British do not conceal their anxiety lest our policy of calculated risk, which requires delicacy as well as firmness, experience as well as resoluteness, may be clumsily and excitedly carried out. Mr. Eden's words about "restraint" being "difficult to practice" were not meant for Moscow alone.

IF WE ASK what is to be the new Moscow line, we cannot, of course, predict it with certainty or in detail. But since Soviet policy is so very conventional, it is reasonable to suppose that Stalin will do again what Russians have so often done before—that he is, as Mr. John Wheeler-Bennett says of his change of line in 1939, "reverting to the age-old Russian policy of the Peredyshka (the breathing space) pursued by Alexander I in dealing with Napoleon at Tilsit in 1807 and by Lenin in negotiating the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk 110 years later.

THE PEACE Conference, so radically misjudged in its subject matter and so misconceived in its procedure, is nearing its predestined end. Though it is ending in a frustrated stalemate, the situation will not remain at a stalemate. For while the opinions of men can become frozen, events do not freeze up and stand still. We have now had in succession De Gaulle, Churchill, Eden, Stalin, each in his own way testifying that the patterns and alignments of the past six months will not fix the permanent shape of the world.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Sweden And Russia

STOCKHOLM—One of the little-noted miracles in a chaotic world is Prime Minister Per Albin Hansson of Sweden. This solid, stocky man who looks so very Swedish has been head of his country's government for 14 years, while the rest of Europe was torn by wars and revolutions.

Childs

He has a quality of massive calm, like the granite rocks of his native coast. Yet he has the gift of compromise, which is the key to the success with which the Swedes have managed their affairs in recent times. Per Albin, as all Sweden calls him, is also perhaps the least egotistical man I ever encountered in public life. When he is asked what is the chief reason Sweden was able to avoid war, he replies jovially, "good luck."

In the view of the Prime Minister, the new trade agreement with Russia, which calls for vast Russian purchases in Sweden, is merely one part of Sweden's post-war commerce. It represents part of an effort of planned society to keep prosperity at a high level and to prevent unemployment.

The negotiations with the Soviet Union have not been easy. The Russians presented a list of what they wanted over a five-year period. The Swedish negotiators replied that their industrialists could not adjust their production to such demands. This reply seemed to surprise the Russians greatly and they intimated that any really strong government would simply order it done.

The Swedes came back with a list of goods they would be able to furnish. This was drawn up with extreme care, since they know that one thing the Russians are unable to understand or forgive is failure to live up to the terms of such an agreement. In past dealings with the Soviets, Swedish industrialists have always been paid promptly and they seem confident today that the terms of the agreement can be carried out.

When it goes into effect, about 10 to 15 per cent of Sweden's export trade will go to Russia. When they talk privately about the agreement, government officials point out that, while this is very much higher than the prewar ratio, the proportion of trade with Great Britain will be nearly twice as large, and this last is also based on extensive credits.

Members of the government protest that agreements with England and Russia do not interfere with the future pattern of multilateral trade sought by the United States. They say they are putting into all agreements a clause stating that the agreement must be brought into conformity with the terms of the world trade association which the U. S. A. hopes to establish.

Yet, in spite of all these reassurances, many observers here are fearful of what the outcome may be. They remember all too well that Sweden's small neighbor, Finland, went for a joyride with the Nazi tiger and came back a prisoner of the Russian bear. Helpless Finland, carrying a staggering burden of reparations, with a staff of Soviet officials occupying Helsingfors' leading hotel, which is barred to all Finns, is after all on Sweden's border.

There are doubts over the reported escape clause in the agreement which is said to permit the Russians to pay back credits within wide limits of discretion. They might make use of the clause to dump goods or gold at a time when the Western democracies were embarrassed by unemployment or price difficulties. Pessimists believe the Soviets will make use of their economic power to promote a collapse of what is left of capitalism in the world.

Doubts also exist on the score of the goods which the Swedes will receive in return for the radios, radio parts, motors and electrical equipment of all kinds which they will send to the USSR. The agreement provides that Russia shall furnish raw materials, including petroleum and manganese. Sweden's need of petroleum is particularly acute, but skeptics doubt that very much oil will ever be delivered.

Prime Minister Hansson's calm confidence is impressive. Those who worked closely with him during the perilous years of the war, when Sweden was at least once on the point of being invaded, say he was never jittery. He believes that we in the United States are much too panicky about Russia. He feels that jittery talk may produce the very thing the world dreads most. Sweden's trade agreement, as he sees it, could serve as a bridge for the West to develop the same kind of profitable relationship with the Soviets.

No one I have talked with here believes Russia wants war. While rumors of internal troubles must always be discounted, as we learned from experience with the Nazis, they do persist here on the periphery of the East in fairly detailed form. Those who know the world best from this northern perspective believe the U. S. A. line of firm resolution is the best line, even though it means risks which could cause a fatal explosion.

Light On Russia

By Barnet Nover

Latest Epistle Of J. Stalin

IT IS OF FIRST-RATE significance that Joseph Stalin has now chosen to make a statement on foreign policy whose conciliatoriness and moderation are in such sharp contrast with the bull-in-the-china-shop tactics which Russia has pursued in her dealings with the western powers for months on end.

NOVER

We can only wait and see, however, whether Russian policy will now really be guided by the belief, voiced by Stalin in his letter to Alexander Werth, that the danger of a "new war" does not exist at present; that Russia is not threatened by encirclement, and that the possibilities of peaceful cooperation between the Soviet Union and the outside world, "far from decreasing, may even grow."

If the Stalin letter does mark an about-face on Russia's part we should soon have evidence of it in a change in Russian tactics at Paris, Lake Success and elsewhere.

THE CHANCES are, however, that the primary motivation behand Stalin's letter was not external but internal, that while addressed to the outside world through the British correspondent who was the physical recipient of the missive, it was really intended for Ivan Ivanovitch, Russia's man in the street.

Despite the iron curtain that separates Russia from the rest of the world, sufficient information has seeped through to suggest that all is not well in the land of the Soviets.

Russia suffered tremendous losses during the war. The terrific exertions her people had to make to achieve victory have also taken their toll.

The Russian people are dogtired. They want to relax. They want some of the good things of life. They are not even getting the bare necessities. Inevitably, then — and this has happened elsewhere as well as Russia—there has been a falling off in morale, a falling off in productivity.

IN AN EFFORT to cope with this situation, the Soviet authorities have been forced to take extreme measures.

Within Russia they have carried out a series of drastic purges to clean out malcontents, grafters, incompetents and shirkers from the bureaucracy, industry and agriculture.

At the same time, they have loudly beaten the war drum, and talked ominously of encirclement and the threat of war so as to provide an excuse for the continued tightening of Russian belts.

It was Stalin himself who set the stage for this campaign of fear in his speech of February 9 in which he declared that war was the inevitable result of the development of "monopoly capitalism," and also placed great emphasis on the need of building up the armed strength of the U. S. S. R.

THIS FEAR campaign does not appear to have succeeded. Productivity in Russia continues to lag behind needs. That is a very important reason why Russian spokesmen have placed such great emphasis on Russia's claim to reparations from former enemy nations.

In Germany, the Russians removed only 20 per cent of the industrial installations that they were entitled to remove from their zone under the Potsdam agreement. They discovered that when the dismantled plants reached Russia there was little they could do with them. So they now allow the factories in their zone to keep operating in order to produce goods that the Soviet Union needs.

THE NET RESULT of the foreign policy which Russia has pursued, in no small degree with domestic considerations primarily in mind, has been anything but beneficial.

In the first place, Russia's tactics have brought about a stiffening in Anglo-American policy toward Russia. Overwhelmingly, sentiment in western lands has turned against a policy of appeasement. And suspicion of Russia has mounted to great heights.

In the second place, the continued war talk emanating from Russia has tended to frighten the Russians themselves as much if not more than it has frightened the outside world. That may be one great reason why Stalin has reversed the position he took last February. The Russian people, no less than the outside world, needs reassuring that there will be no early repetition of the bloodletting and destruction of recent years.

And it is no doubt for the same reason that Stalin has found it necessary to say—what in his heart he cannot believe—that "the atomic bomb is not as serious a force as certain politicians are inclined to regard it."

We cannot afford to assume that as a result of Stalin's reversal of attitude all will now be sweetness and light in the relations between Russia and the West. Russia is too strongly committed to its present policies in Germany, Austria, the Dardanelles, Korea, China, the Balkans and elsewhere to change them quickly or easily.

Stalin's statement is nonetheless an indication that in the pursuit of these policies and in the propaganda that accompanied them Russia overreached herself. The result may be at least a temporary easing of those tensions which produced a state of jitters not only abroad but also within Russia herself.

Thousands of Army Officers To Be Released 6 Months Early

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

A sharp reduction in Army officer strength—making possible the release of thousands of temporary officers months ahead of schedule—was ordered yesterday.

Economy measures and a desire for a "completely volunteer officer corps" were responsible for the move, the War Department said.

A new separation policy for both men and women officers was made public, permitting the release—mostly by December 31—of those who otherwise would not have been eligible until next June 30.

Half to Be Affected

Officials estimated that of some 170,000 temporary officers still in uniform, about half will be affected. Of these, however, many may volunteer to stay on, so that the net reduction in strength cannot be estimated now.

Certain Medical Department officers, critical specialists, recent graduates of Officer Candidates Schools and officers with dependendants overseas or enroute there are exempted from the new release rules.

Major provisions of the new policy provide:

(1) Officers in the United States who had requested the earliest possible release and who would complete two years' service by next June 30 will be processed immediately and will complete their terminal leave by December 31.

Those who had asked to be relieved by the end of this year also will be released without delay.

Officers overseas who had asked for earliest possible release and who complete two years' service by December 31, and those who had asked separation by that date will be returned to the States by the end of the year. Their separation may be delayed beyond that date.

Officers who had agreed to stay in uniform until next June 30 and are on duty in the States will be released immediately if they request it. If overseas, htey may be sent home immediately or held for a replacement, at the discretion of theater commanders. In any case htey must be returned to complete their terminal leave by next June 30.

Two Years Service Needed

Those officers who had volunteered to remain in service indefinitely, or for periods of 12, 18 or 24 months, will be released, upon application "as rapidly as military requirements will permit" and no later than next March 31. They must have completed two years service, however, either as officers or enlisted men.

All temporary officers have been serving under voluntary agreements to remain on active duty either for specified periods or until they could be released.

A second new policy announced yesterday provides that officers will receive their terminal leave within the period of time for which they have signed, excepting officrs overseas who cannot be replaced early enough for this to be possible.

Dr. Robert C. Weaver, director of community services for the American Council on Race Relations, will discuss "A Practical Program in Race Relations for Washington Liberals" at a meeting in the All Souls Church, 16th and Harvard sts. nw., tonight at 8 o'clock.

The meeting, which is sponsored by the Washington chapter of the Union for Democratic Action, is open to the public, Edward Hollander, chairman said yesterday.

Hollander said Dr. Weaver would discuss racial relations activities in various communities and make suggestions for a similar program in the District.

Officials of U. N. Cultural Unit Urged to Follow Its Objectives

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

A recommendation that the secretariat of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization be based on the objectives of UNESCO rather than on professional activities was referred yesterday by the United States National Commission to its committee on findings and reports.

The recommendation was made as a supplement of the report of the round table on cultural institutions and was presented by Luther Evans, librarian of Congress. He urged that:

"Consideration be given to abandoning the present organization of interests which is based on organization of activities and institutions in favor of an organization based more closely upon the objectives of UNESCO."

Referred to the Commission's findings and reports committee was made on motion of Archibald McLeish, former librarian of Congress.

Earlier, members of the commission were introduced to President Truman by William Benton, assistant Secretary of State for public affairs. The commission is meeting here under auspices of the State Department to formulate recommendations to the American delegation to the UNESCO session at Paris in November.

"Thank you, Mr. Benton," the President said after the introductions were over. "I have to keep this hand-shaking arm in good trim during election year—and to a bipartisan group it's good exercise.

"It's a pleasure to have you here. I think this organization can, if it will, contribute as much as any other organization—in connection with the United Nations—to the peace of the world.

"It is understanding that gives us an ability to have peace. When we understand the other fellow's viewpoint, and he understands ours, then we can sit down and if there are differences work them out.

"If there is no understanding, there can be no peace; and if there is no education, there can be no peace. If we can exchange educators with all the countries in the world, and send ours to those countries to show our viewpoint, it won't be long until we have the world situation as we have it in the 48 States—we don't have any difficulties, or any insoluble difficulties, between the 48 States that can't be settled on a peaceful basis. The reason for that is that we understand each other.

"I am extremely interested in this organization. I think it can make the greatest contribution in the history of the world to the welfare of the world as a whole, if it really goes at it in the spirit that is intended.

"From what Mr. Benton has told me about the people you have elected to your official positions, I believe that you are on the road to do the job. That's all I ask of you.

"There are two things in the world I want above everything else—peace in the world and unity at home. That's what I have been fighting for since I have been here. That's what President Roosevelt was fighting for while he was here.

"You can make that contribution on a world basis. I want you to do it.

"Thank you very much."

Round table reports on recommendations by committees of consultants on Education, Mass Communications, Cultural Institutions, Natural Sciences, Social Sciences, Humanities and Creative Arts were adopted by the Commission in the afternoon. These recommendations in general were adopted with occasional amendments from the floor.

The round table report on Cultural Institutions, presented by Ralph A. Ulveling, president of the American Library Association, was recommitted after objections were raised to some of its provisions. One of these recommended that UNESCO call an international Congress of Archivists and set up details of its organization. Educators raised doubts as to its "great immediat evalue in promoting peace and security."

The report on mass communications, presented by Justin Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, recommended establishment of a worldwide radio network and, in the meantime, use of all existing radio facilities.

Because of space limitations, the second portion of James K. Pollock's article on "Federalism in Germany" will be published in tomorrow's issue, along with Walter Lippmann's reply to the communication.

Housing Program Inquiry Demanded By Sen. Ferguson

Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.), terming the Administration's housing program a "fraud upon the American people," demanded yesterday that the Senate's Mead Committee investigate the whole housing situation.

The committee is to open a series of hearings today on the Canol project, the Inter-American Highway and the progress in returning civilian-type surplus goods from abroad.

Arriving here for these hearings, Ferguson, a committee member, told reporters he would move formally that the committee put aside everything else if necessary to make "a thorough investigation of the housing situation and the building industry and Government regulation of same."

Later, he issued a written statement repeating his demand and saying that "to date we have had promises but no production."

Nazi Leaders to Learn Fate At Nuernberg Starting Oct. 1

Nuernberg, Sept. 25 (AP).—The international military tribunal will begin handing down its judgments in the world's first international war crimes trial on Monday, September 30 at 10 a. m. (4 a. m., Eastern Standard Time), it was announced today.

The entire first day will be taken up with a review of the evedence presented in more than nine months against 22 top Nazi and 7 Nazi organizations, according to tentative plans. Judgments will be announced the following day, October 1, followed by the sentencing of the individuals. This may take more than one day.

There will be no sentences handed down against the organizations. The verdicts on the organizations will be used in the later trials of individual members of the organizations.

There will be no direct broadcasts or televised broadcasts from the courtroom.

Speedy Executions Ordered

Munich, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Allied control council has ordered that any of the Nazi defendants at Nuernberg sentenced to death by the international military tribunal shall be executed in the fifteenth day after the pronouncement of sentence in open court, it was learned authoritatively today.

ika, said the fighting was no longer a "question of order" but "a question of war," and that his government would use "all means at its disposal" to crush the insurgents.

Tsaldaris also accused "foreign influences" of perpetuating disorders in Greece.

The British Foreign Office said that Greek armed forces still were receiving arms and equipment from Britain, and indicated that British troops might enter the fighting "in the last resort."

The British recently announced that some British troops were being withdrawn from Greece in a reshuffle of forces in the Middle East but 20,000 of them were estimated to be in the country.

The foreign office spokesman said that British Tommies would not join the Greeks in their campaign against the insurgents, however, without an invitation from the Greek government.

There was no immediate indication of whether the British Mediterranean Fleet, massed just off the Greek coast for summer maneuvers, would figure in any British support of the Greek government.

British Stopped Civil War

British troops invaded Greece late in 1944 to drive out the Germans. Winston Churchill announced they would remain to preserve order and they were the chief factor in stopping the civil war that broke out when the leftist EAM arose in revolt in December, 1944 after the liberation.

Greek government sources in London said that the conflict stemmed from "militant communism encouraged from the other side of the border."

For many months the government has been engaged in an effort to wipe out leftist bands attacking villages in northern Greece.

Some of these bands, a Greek spokesman said, were Greek leftists who fled to Albania or Yugoslavia when the EAM was broken up. Some Albanians and Yugoslavs join these bands as individuals, he said, though not as members of the Albanian or Yugoslav armies.

Both the Yugoslavs and Bulgarians were inclined to minimize any talk of crisis.

A Turkish spokesman in London said that his country, custodian of the Dardanelles, "is the only effective barrier against Russian domination of the Middle East."

Military and diplomatic sources in Italy declared there was no doubt the bulk of the Albanian army, estimated at 80,000, was concentrated on the Greek border. They pointed out that Albania is publicly committed to fight for northern Epirus if the Paris Peace Conference grants Greece that territory.

Allied sources in Italy said there were some Russians in Albania engaged in training Albanian troops.

Some Allied observers in Italy said reports of sleight-of-hand manipulation of troops in Albania—the changing of insignia on motor transport overnight and the marching of army columns by circuitous routes—possibly were part of a war of nerves.

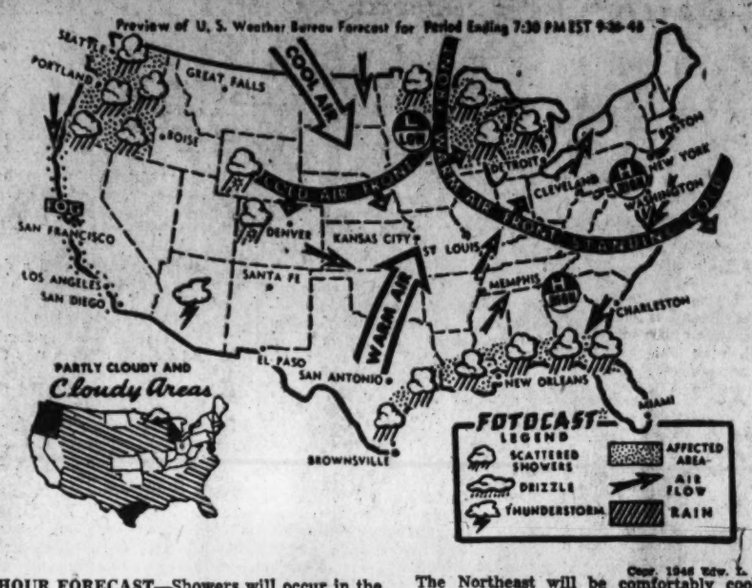
Greek sources, too, have complained of diplomatic pressure. Both Yugoslavia and Russia have withdrawn their ambassadors from Athens, leaving only charges d'affaires.

Register at 18, Draft Heads Warn

Selective Service officials yesterday reminded young men that they still must register on their eighteenth birthday, even though they cannot be drafted until they are 19.

The national headquarters said there had been a misunderstanding by some youths because Congress exempted 18-year-olds from training and service, but that no change had been made in the registration requirement. Failure to register is punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

National Weather Summary



Copr. 1946 Edw. L. A. Warth

24-HOUR FORECAST—Showers will occur in the western Great Lakes region, along the Gulf Coast and in the southern Rockies where indicated on the FOTOCAST. Also, there will be snow flurries in Wyoming and Colorado where moist, cool air drops some of its moisture in passing over mountainous areas of the central Rocky Mountain States.

The northwestern States of Oregon and Washington will have showers, too, but they will occur at widely scattered points as moist ocean air moves inland.

Clear weather is promised a large portion of the Nation from New England and the Middle Atlantic States westward through the Ohio Valley and Central Plains. Mostly clear conditions will prevail over the southwest in Nevada and California, though the latter State will have some normal morning fog along the coast.

Partly cloudy skies will be observed in the northern Plains, Rocky Mountain areas, Southern and Southeastern portions of the United States.

The Northeast will be comfortably cool as far westward as the Great Lakes.

Below normal temperatures will prevail from the Lakes west to the northern Rockies as a circulation of cool air from central Canada moves south and eastward in the north central portion of the country. This is not excessively cold air, however, and thermometer readings in the sections mentioned will only vary slightly from the normal in their dip to lower levels.

The southern half of the country will have about normal temperatures with maximum readings near 90 in the south central and southwestern parts of the Nation. Further east, but south of the cold air front, the highest readings will be near 80 degrees.

Clearing weather will follow the showers pictured for the western Lakes areas, according to United States Weather Bureau forecasters.

The snow flurries or showers in the central Rockies are quite normal for autumn due to the lower temperatures and high elevations of the region.

parent companies of Duquesne Light to come to Pittsburgh to negotiate with the union and "work out a sound and permanent labor policy."

Mueller incurred the court's anger by terming the injunction "less than a scrap of paper."

Several more thousand workers were idled today by Pittsburgh district plants shutting down or curtailing operations because of the strike. In the strike's first day, yesterday, more than 20,000 employes of large steel and other industrial firms were furloughed.

Thousands more office and store workers—just how many no one could say—stayed home from work.

The layoffs were due primarily to a 75 per cent curtailment of streetcar service. Service was also reduced on several bus routes.

With chiefly supervisors manning the company's power plants, a Duquesne Light Co. spokesman said its power supply sagged to 35 per cent of normal. Current still flowed to homes and store, and the company said the limited service could be continued for several more days if use is conserved enough.

The main union demand in its contract dispute is a 20 per cent wage increase. The union reported its present average base pay is $1.18 an hour and the increase would make it about $1.41.

5000 Idle in Shoe Strike

Buenos Aires, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—About 5000 workers in all shoe factories in the Buenos Aires area struck today demanding higher wages. Simultaneously, a slowdown strike in packing plants had virtually paralyzed the industry. A few animals were killed or processed today.

adopted laws sufficient to stamp out fascism.

The Military Commission meanwhile became bogged down in a long procedural discussion trying to decide where in the Bulgarian treaty to place the Greek amendment, approved yesterday, calling for demilitarization of the Bulgarian frontier, which has no fortifications.

No Relaxation for Austria

Paris, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—Austrian Foreign Minister Karl Gruber said today that his lengthy talks with the Russians here gave him no hope for immediate relaxation of the harsh Soviet attitude toward Austria in both the economic and political spheres.

Gruber, on the eve of his return to Vienna, pointed out that occupation army costs absorbed about one-third of his country's total budget. Gruber said he had had two extended interviews with Russian Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs Andrei Vishinski, but they had failed to solve such problems as Russian seizure of 100 factories in the Soviet zone.

Officials Here Mystified

The State Department had no information on this charge, and officials were mystified by it. It is not usual for either the Belgrade information service or any of the others around the world to let their equipment be used for such purposes.

The United States Information Service in Belgrade distributes an average of 240 copies a day—80 in English and 160 in Serbo-Croat—of a daily wireless bulletin containing the texts of official documents and excerpts from American editorials. These copies go to editors, Government officials and citizens who have requested them.

In addition, the USIS maintains an exhibit center where official documents are displayed on a bulletin board, and also a reading room and reference library. Similar facilities are maintained by American embassies and legations in almost every country.

Recalls Moscow Closing

This is the first time an American information service and library have been ordered closed by any foreign government. Last year the British government was ordered to close its reference library in Moscow, and as a result the State Department decided not to establish one of its own in the Russian capital.

The Yugoslav Embassy in Washington is free to publish and distribute any information material in this country, subject only to the requirement that it register its activity with the Department of Justice. State Department officials indicated yesterday that retaliation against the Yugoslavs here was unlikely, even if Tito's government insisted on closing the American services in Belgrade.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

WITH the public engrossed with Cabinet flare-ups and the Russian imbroglio, a lot of juicy plums may go to certain business firms who know the ropes in Washington.

Though little publicized, juiciest plums in Government repose in the office of the Alien Property Custodian, supposed to protect priceless Germany property for the taxpayers. One lush company is I. G. Chemie, the Swiss-Nazi firm seized by the United States during the war.

Remington-Rand is now angling to get I. G. Chemie. They have hired the son-in-law of statesmanlike Senator Barkley of Kentucky, Max Truitt, and have done a lot of backstage lobbying. They have even talked to Senator Mead of New York, former chairman of the Mead Investigating Committee, to ascertain whether the deal would be investigated—if made.

This column will endeavor to report on what finally happens.

GOP Turnabouts

LAST SPRING, Republican Senator Wherry of Nebraska and other Congressmen out to kill the OPA, howled their heads off that OPA was ignoring the black market. Today, as OPA agents are trying to clean up the black market, those very same Congressmen and Senators are complaining that OPA is too aggressive. Some Congressmen actually want to have the OPA call off its agents . . . Senator Claude Pepper's vigorous attack on President Truman as having flouted Roosevelt ideals was mild compared to what Truman said privately about Pepper. His remarks, largely unprintable, reached Pepper's ears and probably helped sour him on the White House . . . The President doesn't seem to realize that he can't sound off against Senators one day and then get their cooperation the next . . . The Civil Service Commission has launched a secret probe as to why West Point-Annapolis applicants get higher marks when they take examinations in Washington. The commission is also anxious to find out why such a high proportion of the lucky applicants who take their exams in the Nation's Capital are sons of high Army-Navy officers.

Antilynching Board

PRESIDENT TRUMAN is considering the appointment of a new White House commission to make a complete review of lynchings. This was discussed at a recent conference between the President, Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and James B. Carey of the CIO United Electrical Workers.

The two men told Truman about several atrocities against Negroes, one of them the case of Isaac Woodward of New York City, a young war veteran whose eyes were gouged out by a policeman near Aiken, S. C.

Woodward was turned over to the police after an argument with a bus driver, who upbraided him for spending too much time in a bus depot washroom. The vet, who served three years in the Army, including 15 months in the South Pacific, had been discharged in Atlanta, Ga., 3 hours before the incident and was on his way home to New York.

Carey and White reported that Woodward has been held in a South Carolina veterans' hospital ever since the incident and no one has been allowed to talk to him.

"I am familiar with some of these cases," Truman observed, "but didn't realize this brutality was so widespread. I am shocked and horrified by your report."

He added that he realized the lynching problem had not been "adequately dealt with by the Federal Government," largely because the Federal Government is still hampered by State legal barriers.

Truman himself proposed the idea of a presidential "emergency" commission, similar to the Roberts Pearl Harbor Board, with authority to investigate lynchings and assaults, review "shortcomings" in the present law and make recommendations for legislation to better safeguard civil liberties. He said that he would be glad to initiate such legislation.

The Diplomatic Pouch

THERE'S been some eyebrow lifting in the State Department over the way United States Ambassador George Messersmith has been hobnobbing with the Fascist Peron government. Messersmith has even made several talks to Peron's followers to the effect that Argentina will be considered a worthy ally when the "probable war between the United States and Russia" breaks out. . . . Assistant Secretary of State Spruille Braden not only raises his eyebrows but is sore. Messersmith's transfer may be demanded when Byrnes returns from Paris. . . . General Eisenhower has been asked to send specially trained military police to Manila to break up thievery in Army and civilian postoffices. Fifteen per cent of all packages and even letters to GI's in Manila are opened and looted. From five to seven million dollars' worth of Army equipment is stolen in the Philippines each month—with about 10 jeeps disappearing every day. . . . Members of the House Military Affairs Committee, just returned from United States Pacific bases, say military equipment is going to pot, that the most modern equipment is not being installed, that morale among the men is low. They blame themselves as much as the Army.

Atomic Lilienthal

DAVID LILIENTHAL is No. 1 choice to head the powerful Atomic Energy Committee. Able lame-duck Bob La Follette of Wisconsin will also be appointed either to the Atomic Commission or replace Lilienthal as head of TVA. . . . Henry Morgenthau was all set to take over all of Henry Wallace's cancelled foreign policy speaking engagements when Wallace was muzzled, but had not yet resigned. Morgenthau and Wallace see eye-to-eye on foreign policy; also on Jimmy Byrnes.

Trumanites are worried over intimations that Wallace will reveal certain highly secret things that transpired inside the Cabinet regarding foreign policy . . .

President Truman has abandoned his search for a Government post for his old friend, Senator Wheeler of Montana. Wheeler will practice law in Montana and Washington, doesn't want a Government job. Several railroads are eager to hire their one-time severest critic.

Far Eastern Report

HERE'S what members of the House Military Affairs Committee reported to General Eisenhower, following their return from an inspection of our military bases in the Far East:

1. Morale of our Far East occupational troops is being endangered by the Army's delay in sending wives and families to officers and enlisted men.

2. The Army is doing little to set up facilities for the proper housing of Army wives and children who want to join the troops, Eisenhower was informed. On Okinawa, for instance, surplus Army stoves and plumbing supplies—badly needed in Quonset huts where Army families will be housed—have been sold to the Chinese.

3. Another demoralizing factor is the shortage of cigarettes and fresh fruit and vegetables.

Eisenhower promised to look into these facts immediately.

By Richard L. Coe

ON SO VACUOUS an effort as the Palace's "Holiday in Mexico," it may seem inappropriate to drop a blockbuster of wholehearted disapproval. O. K., we'll be inappropriate.

In turning out this musical, MGM probably only thought of making another Technicolor musical in the style of its previous girls, saccharine and tune festivals. That it is boring and tasteless is not the point of this morning's tirade.

Ilona Massey

What is infuriating is its incredibly childish picture of national characteristics. True enough, it portrays life in the diplomatic set of Mexico City, an accepted frivolity in make-believe, but for Hollywood to stoop so low now—and probably unwittingly—is a gloomy sidelight on the American mind.

In it you see an American Ambassador to Mexico whose main concern seems to be kicking up the embers of an old romance with a night club singer. His daughter is an utter brat whose parade of clothing would make Mrs. Harrison Williams look to her throne.

The British Ambassador and his wife are as water-blooded as only Hollywood can imagine Britain's uppercrust and their son is so spineless a goon he makes Fauntleroy seem like Tarzan of the Apes.

The French Ambassador, his wife and daughter are the epitome of comic-strip French folk—excitable, proud, foolish, grasping and anything else you care to think of that is discreditable.

The Mexicans are made out to be dither-headed romanticos, thinking only of wine, women and siesta.

We're Really Terrific

Of course, the Americans put on the best parties, have the snappiest cars, the most luxurious embassy, literally reek with Technicolored charm and are the cleverest of the lot. Their Mexican servants just adore them.

Such a picture as this, it seems to me, has an insidiously evil influence. Many who see in this picture only a too-long musical will unconsciously swallow the pernicious notion that all these nations have such national characteristics and that only our own is utterly perfect. For such implications to be appearing on the screens throughout the States is bad enough. How it must strike a foreigner you can imagine.

Very appropriately, the Eric Johnston office has just announced that it will not permit export of American films which will give foreign nations a false idea of this country. How false this notion might be, pessimists may argue. In any event, one hopes "Holiday in Mexico" won't get a passport for foreign travel.

Iturbi, Iturbi, and Iturbi

As to the picture itself, it makes much of a comparative newcomer named Jane Powell, a 14-year-old set of teeth fronting a voice perfected by sound-track tricks. She plays Ambassador Walter Pidgeon's daughter. Producer Joe Pasternak obviously is trying to do for Jane what he did for Deanna Durbin only more so.

Ilona Massey is permitted a song or two while Jane is out of sight, an infrequent blessing. Xavier Cugat plays himself, Jose Iturbi plays himself and Iturbi's family plays themselves, and if you want to meet a self-conscious gang of exhibitionists, here's your dish.

The musical numbers have all the originality of a morning radio program and hundred-piece orchestras flow like wine. The finale, wherein the versatile little offspring of the American Ambassador sings Ave Maria before an audience that stretches miles into the Mexican hills, will send you scurrying from the theater for the lonely luxury of a phone booth.

The sardonic sidelight to all this is that people probably will be attracted to it the way our wife was. "I don't care whether it's any good or not," she chirped. "I just want to see Walter Pidgeon."

Russian Policy

Stalin in his newspaper interview was most interesting in his reference to Russia's relations with Germany. For Germany is the touchstone of the East-West conflict. About Russia's intentions in Germany there has been a tremendous amount of speculation since Mr. Molotov's speech of July 10. This speech gave grounds for belief that Russia was planning to transform the Reich into a spearpoint of Soviet policy in the west. Now Stalin says:

> I believe the utilization of Germany by the Soviet Union against western Europe and the United States of America to be precluded . . . not only because the Soviet Union is bound by a treaty of mutual assistance against German aggression with Great Britain and France and with the United States of America by the decisions of the Potsdam Conference . . . but also because the policy of utilization of Germany against western Europe and the United States . . . would mean a departure of the Soviet Union from its fundamental national interests. Briefly speaking, the policy of the Soviet Union on the German problem amounts to demilitarization and democratization of Germany.

We welcome this pronouncement as a change of tune more in keeping with peace and reconstruction. The belief that Stalin expressed in the possibility of friendly and lasting cooperation of the Soviet Union and the Western democracies should be reciprocated. This can be done, it seems to us, by announcing a five-year plan based on the Ruhr for the reconstruction of Germany and of Europe. With some such scheme nailed to our masthead in Europe, we could meet with Russia after the present conference and seek ways and means of accommodating her grave economic needs, so as to prevail upon her to work as part of a four-power concert in Germany in the spirit of Potsdam.

Rescue

The story of the rescue of 18 survivors from the wreck of the Belgian airliner in Newfoundland comes in time to restore some of the prestige that the human race has been losing in its own eyes. Here, for once, the human qualities of heroism and ingenuity were employed in the interest of life rather than of devastation and death. The liner with 44 souls aboard crashed to earth, remember, in a forest wilderness. All those in the forward part of the ship perished in the flames. Four persons apparently, including Mlle. Jeanne Rooki, the little Belgian stewardess, were hurled clear of the wreck.

At this point Mlle. Rooki becomes the heroine of the story. Although both her legs had been shattered, she managed, with the help of three passengers, to drag 16 persons from the wreck, but 2 of them were already dying. She took command of the survivors, directing that the injured be made as comfortable as possible, and dispatching three who were relatively unhurt to reconnoiter the country and to search for help.

The situation of Mlle. Rooki and her party seemed desperate indeed. They were wholly surrounded by dense and impassable growths of spruce and were apparently inaccessible from the air. Some distance from them was a river full of rapids, over which it would be well nigh impossible to move the injured. To increase their suffering, a steady, chilling rain set in.

The first to find them were a pair of trappers. These, however, could do little more than set up smudges against the dangerous forest insects and to put out markers that would be visible to the scouting planes. Presently the planes sighted them, but a landing was, of course, impossible. The planes, however, dropped sleeping bags and other supplies. Meanwhile, an Army rescue party of 14 men from the Gander Air Base, headed by Capt. Samuel P. Martin, a medical officer, was making its way toward them, now by the river in collapsible rubber boats, now hacking their way through the forest growths.

Captain Martin and his men soon converted the scene of the wreck into an emergency hospital. But the problem of getting them out remained. By this time Catalina flying boats of the Coast Guard were waiting on the lake only 5 miles distant, but it was those 5 miles that made the difference.

It was then that huge transport planes from the States arrived at the Gander Air Base, bringing with them the dismantled and crated parts of the new Sikorsky helicopters. The helicopters were hastily assembled on the field. Coast Guard pilots flew them to the scene of the wreck and then began the most difficult and delicate operation of the whole undertaking. One at a time, or two by two, the survivors were lifted into the helicopters and carried to the lake, where they were transferred aboard one of the flying boats which now began to shuttle back and forth between the lake shore and the Gander Air Base. Some 96 hours after the wreck the last of the survivors was admitted to the Sir Frederick Banting Memorial Hospital.

Between them the Army and the Coast Guard had accomplished what was probably the most dramatic and ingenious aerial rescue operation in history. The country is proud of their exploit.

Health Progress

A beginning has been made, albeit an extremely modest beginning, toward realization of the comprehensive national health program outlined last fall by President Truman. The initial meeting, held here last week under the leadership of Surgeon General Parran, of the Federal Hospital Council established to implement the Hospital Survey and Construction Act was a fruitful and hopeful one. The council started on the task of defining standards for equitable distribution of the grants-in-aid to the States authorized by the act. Since the total funds authorized amount to no more than 75 million dollars annually for the next five years —a pitifully small fraction of the national need—the allocation is far from easy. There is reason to hope, however, that wise administration of the funds available will encourage Congress to make more adequate appropriations in the future.

The Hospital Construction Act is, of course, but the first item in the President's five-point health program, as Federal Security Administrator Watson Miller observed in his speech welcoming the members of the council and the national advisory committee. There has been some progress, too, in respect of the second point recommending expansion of public health, maternal and child health services. The public health budget has been raised from 20 million to 30 million dollars for venereal disease and tuberculosis prevention, the public nursing service and industrial hygiene. And funds for maternal and child health, crippled children and public child welfare services were augmented from $11,200,000 to $22,000,000. In addition, in the area of medical education and research, the third point in the President's program, there has been an increase in funds for the National Institute of Health and the National Cancer Institute as well as provision of 10 million dollars for grants-in-aid to States to establish mental health services.

No action at all has yet been taken in connection with the fourth and fifth presidential recommendations, prepayment of medical costs and protection against loss of wages from sickness and disability. The Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill remains grounded. But that there is a growing public demand for health insurance is evidenced by the development of voluntary programs, especially to cover hospital costs. The AMA theme song that health insurance is socialized medicine is getting to sound more and more cracked and screechy.

Altogether, the progress made toward improvement of the Nation's health facilities and services is substantial and significant. The trend should be accelerated by the coordination of health, education and social security programs under the Federal Security Agency, achieved in conformity with the President's reorganization plan. It would receive further impetus through congressional enactment of the Fulbright-Taft bill implementing the President's request for a Department of Welfare with Cabinet status. No phase of domestic affairs concerns us as a people more vitally than this.

Snyder On Taxes

In his address last Tuesday to the American Bankers Association, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder reiterated his view that the "Federal Government should direct its primary effort on the fiscal front to achieving a balanced budget." "Better yet," he added, "it should strive to achieve a substantial surplus of taxes over expenditures to apply to debt reduction." To attain these ends Mr. Snyder concludes that present tax levels must be maintained for some time to come. "I think," he said, "that it is pure fantasy, if not plain demagogy, to talk of tax reduction and debt reduction in the same breath."

In emphasizing the difficulty of reducing expenditures in the near future Mr. Snyder is not taking a defeatist attitude toward economy proposals. On the contrary, he indicated, with appropriate cautionary reservations, that the huge outlays contemplated for national defense single out this group of expenditures for "special attention in looking for areas in which to reduce expenditures—keeping in mind, of course, that budgetary considerations must be secondary in the determination of our needs for national defense." That judgment is in line with the conclusion reached by the Committee for Economic Development in its recently issued memorandum on fiscal policy. Moreover, in view of the large volume of irreducible debt charges and veteran outlays, as well as the limited economies to be effectuated by reductions in the expenses of the regular executive establishments, it is an inescapable conclusion. Unless we find means of cutting defense outlays—and we could do so without impairing our security by setting up a single department of national defense—the outlook for substantial tax reductions is, indeed, gloomy if we contemplate retiring public debt by utilizing budgetary surpluses.

In discussing related problems of debt management Mr. Snyder made it plain that the Treasury has no intention of abandoning the low-interest policy which the Treasury followed during the war years. He believes, with good reason, that stability of the Government bond market, dependent upon maintenance of the present interest-rate patterns, is most important in order to maintain public confidence in the credit of the Government. At the same time he emphasizes the importance of pushing the sale of savings bonds, recognizing the desirability of shifting the public debt increasingly into the hands of individual investors, thereby absorbing surplus funds and relieving inflationary pressures on prices.

London Squatters

The crisis created by the invasion of unoccupied houses and apartment buildings in the fashionable West End of London by hundreds of homeless families seems to have ended. Last week Mr. George Tomlinson, Minister of Works, asked and obtained interim injunctions against the squatters who had taken possession of the large and luxurious Duchess of Bedford Apartments in Campden Hill, Kensington. A similar injunction was granted against the squatters in Abbey Lodge in Regent's Park. These orders of the court had, of course, no more efficacy than the power of the government to enforce them. Had the squatters decided to resist, riots of very serious proportions might have followed, and the use of arms might have been necessary to evict the squatters. However, the authority that the idea of law still exerts over the imagination of the humblest British subject is well illustrated in the fact that, as soon as the decision of the court to grant the injunctions was made known, the squatters announced that they would leave voluntarily.

But, although the immediate crisis has passed, the condition which permitted such a crisis to develop remains as acute as ever. It is no secret, of course, that the "squatters' invasion" was organized and directed by the Communist Party, and this is the first time it has been able to command so large a popular following. In the demonstration in behalf of the squatters on September 15, several thousand persons participated, among them many veterans of the recent war. The net result, of course, has not been any improvement in the condition of London's homeless thousands, but a valuable propaganda victory for the Communists, who have succeeded in forcing the government into the role of an upholder of property rights against the right of human beings to one of the most elementary creature comforts.

The housing situation in London, of course, differs only in degree from that which exists in almost every large city in the world, including Washington. In London, of course, it is aggravated by the tremendous devastation wrought by the Nazi bombings. But there as here the core of the difficulty is the inability of either the municipal governments or the private builders to get their programs for new construction under way. The Labor government made plans for an elaborate adventure in municipal housing and decreed that licenses for private construction should be issued in the ratio of one dwelling unit to every four dwelling units constructed on contracts to be let by municipalities. This, it is said, has had the effect of virtually paralyzing private construction in England, while government construction has been in many cases delayed or obstructed by the familiar bureaucratic confusions.

Rail Delay

Acting Secretary of Commerce Alfred Schindler committed a grave indiscretion by urging the ICC to delay action on the carriers' request for freight rate increases, "until the traffic, the revenues and operating expense picture for the remaining months of 1946 and the early months of 1947 is clear." It may be, as Mr. Schindler contends, that spokesmen for the railways have underestimated the economies to be achieved next year by a reduction of their labor force and introduction of modernized equipment. But it is rash indeed for Mr. Schindler to set up his judgment as a guide to conduct in face of the testimony of responsible railway executives regarding the gloomy earnings prospects of the Nation's carriers. As one witness, with more conviction than grammar, stated, "the time to correct situations where railroads are unable to earn their operating expenses and be assured of a fair profit and permit stockholders to share in the earnings is while the railroads are solvent, not after they have been declared bankrupt or placed in the hands of receivers."

Delay in granting the rate increases that are required immediately would also necessitate postponement of outlays to take care of deferred maintenance and modernize equipment. As a result, opportunities to improve operating efficiency and give the public better service would be forfeited. Shippers as well as carriers suffer from an inadequate scale of rate charges and Mr. Schindler is, therefore, failing to protect the interests of the business community in pleading for delay.

OLD MAID

The old maid's eye looks down.
The eyelids shut away
The contemplation and chagrin.
Her thoughts are all reflective now.
The lips repeat the sounds they shape,
The faded apple, the tardy grape
Whose hidden dew is stolen by the sun.

The nose has grown acquisitive and keen.
No longer neighbor to the cheeks
That once were curves from that straight line.
The tear that circles in the eye
Is saltier, is a rarer jewel
Than those that ran like rain in June.
The tear descends to mock the breast
Whose sorrow is reflective now,
A little shadow seen at noon.

Ickes' Resignation

In your issue of Saturday, September 21, you carry a United Press dispatch which says: "(Truman) fired Ickes in a row over the ill-starred appointment of oil man Edwin W. Pauley . . ." On page 6, your usually reliable Robert C. Albright, in his column, says: "Unlike Harold Ickes . . . after similar word from Mr. Truman . . ." I take this to mean that Mr. Alibright intends to convey the thought that President Truman had asked even me for my resignation.

A responsible agency and a responsible newspaper ought to know better. The record is perfectly clear. President Truman never asked me for my resignation, nor was there any intimation that he would do so. I resigned entirely of my own motion when President Truman made it clear that he was put out because, when I had been summoned as a witness by the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, in response to questions I had told certain unpleasant truths about Mr. Pauley.

I did not need any suggestion from anyone that I did not care to serve longer under such a man as President Truman had proved himself to be. In my syndicated column, which was printed on September 20, I insisted that Secretary Wallace should resign. That column was actually written on September 15. Secretary Wallace would have been well advised if he had resigned. He did not belong in the Cabinet when he could no longer accept the foreign policy of the Administration. Nor would he have felt comfortable serving under a President who had clearly authorized Mr. Wallace to make a speech on foreign policy which later he assigned as the reason for firing Mr. Wallace.

I am in full accord with the position of The Post that the members of the Cabinet and other administrative officers must follow Administration policy in foreign affairs. Failing this they should resign. HAROLD L. ICKES.

Army Promotions

In your issue of August 30, under the heading, "Kilian Convicted of Letting Guards Club Yank Prisoners," you state, "He was up for promotion to permanent colonel last winter, but The Washington Post discovered his name on a list and a congressional committee postponed approval."

Some 349 lieutenant colonels of the Regular Army, all eligible for promotion to the rank of colonel, were nominated by the War Department for such promotion and the nominations were confirmed by the Senate. Col. Kilian's name was 191 on that list. Following The Post's "discovery" the Senate withdrew confirmation of the list.

The only result of The Post's "discovery" has been as follows: Forty officers entitled to promotion to the grade of colonel while on the active list have been retired in that grade under provisions of law but without having had their proper promotion made permanent while on the active list. One of these on the list of 40 had been a prisoner of war after Bataan; 306 officers, of whom 170 are senior to Kilian, all of whom are entitled to promotion after more than 29 years of service, have been denied the promotion that is rightfully theirs. Three officers, all junior to Kilian, were promoted to permanent brigadier generals in the Regular Army and thus did not suffer the fate of the above 346.

Of the 306 officers whose promotions have thus been unjustly withheld in order to withhold Kilian's promotion, at least 7 were former prisoners of the Japanese captured at Bataan or Corregidor. In addition, the promotion of 172 other lieutenant colonels (including at least 2 who were taken prisoner at Bataan) are being held up despite the fact that vacancies have occurred since the original list was withdrawn.

The punishment awarded Colonel Kilian, or any other punishment that might have been awarded him, could have been given whether he was promoted or not. The net result of your "discovery" has been to deny proper recognition to 346 officers with average service of over 30 years each. C. O. KATES.

"OPA in The Diary"

May I commend your September 23 editorial "OPA in the Dairy," which satirizes the "keeping a close watch for further advances" professed by the Decontrol Board. But you do not expose the powerful interests in Washington which have operated to prevent recontrol of milk, butter and cheese. Let the consumer know what these interests are, opposing his interest.

Byrnes' Strength

I think I am justified in assuming that all loyal Americans love our Secretary of State—Jimmy Byrnes—for the enemies he has made. The original habitat of the Byrnes family was the County Wicklow, Ireland. The Byrnes family ranked among Ireland's greatest and most distinguished. On one occasion an English potentate arrived in Ireland to suppress the Byrnes family. He inquired of Tom Moore, the poet, "From whom sprung this Byrnes family?" Moore promptly replied, "The Byrnes family sprung from nobody; they always spring at them."

This information should be transmited to Stalin.

WINX Programs

We are most grateful for the excellent musical programs we enjoy on WINX, and hope you will not only continue but increase these delightful snatches of real music, since we have so much tin pan discordant sounds. We who are shutins have to depend upon the radio for enjoyment. It is a great pity this which should be a blessing is turned into such hideous caterwauling singing, and rough stuff on the other radios. We also enjoy the "near truth" references to political matters.

Our Relations With Russia

I read in your issue of September 23 an Associated Press dispatch reporting that Soviet Russia is silent on third United States offer of loan. More than a year ago Russia applied through regular channels for a loan. For some nine months we didn't even acknowledge her request; then we claimed that her application had been lost, which claim was later discredited. Now we ask Russia to renew her request. With a well-thought-out foreign policy we could have been spared this humiliation.

Who among us had not experienced a time when we required immediate financial help? The first reaction is to apply to a close friend; the measure of friendship is judged by the reaction of our friend to our need. Our reaction to the British loan is a good example of friendship between English speaking peoples. It is now generally conceded that we fumbled with the Russian request, but we have yet to read an editorial in a responsible paper in language the Russians can understand making such admission. Diplomats may refer to this as a minor incident; it is very big with the Russians.

I was born among the Russians and know something of their sensitive nature; that does not give me authority to convey to a Westerner their peculiar characteristics. If I am permitted to express an opinion, taking into consideration that human nature changes little, I would say that present-day Bolsheviks are somewhat a cross between childish naivete and adolescent pomposity. After all, they were illiterate and a slave people some 80 years ago, governed by the most corrupt and decaying government.

But one does not have to be born there or be an oracle to know when we offend. From the Western point of view it may be good diplomacy to grant the British loan and delay the Russian loan until they learn to be good; but present-day Russia does not understand the ancient game of diplomacy still played by her neighbors. If she does fairly well now in dealing with Western powers on their own terms, see what happens when a young giant on his march and knows where he is going, is challenged.

Every American, conscious and proud of his country, is not afraid of communism. Even an ardent American Communist no longer claims that his government is better. There is now universal agreement that our form of government is the best on earth. Russia needs a dictatorship, the kind she has now. Were our form of government imposed on her, chaos would result within a month; conversely, were a dictator imposed on us we won't wait a month to depose him. Russia will continue to make progress in democracy and call it communism; we shall continue to adopt progressive measures and still call it democracy. Anyone prone to question this let him compare both countries as of today to what they were 25 or 30 years ago. The point I am making that change goes on.

For over 50 years I have been learning (and still learn) how to be the best American in my class group and the end is not in sight even though death is. Self-government is either a fine applied art or a long-term profession. The flexibility of our Constitution (with suitable amendments) makes the instrument as timely today as when it was written. The term personal liberty is full of potentialities. At the rate Russia is progressing in self-government it will take her two or more centuries to reach our present proficiency in self-government.

Yet we are only 140 years older than Russia in the art of self-government. This is a small interval of time in the affairs of nations. Britain has over a thousand years experience in old time diplomacy. Her empire is definitely on the decline; her old time diplomacy will no longer serve her. Russia, who came to our rescue when we were young, when the British would annihilate us, won't let her. Let us not mix our young blood with a dying dynasty.

It is not true that Americans are callous to Russia's needs—or to anybody's needs who requires our help; we demonstrated that. Nor is it true that we are incompetent to manage our foreign policy. We have the talent and brains to deal with difficult situations in our own way if left alone to work out our problems. But Churchill's iron curtain speech clinched the world's and Russia's suspicion that since the death of Roosevelt Britain finally has succeeded in appending our foreign policy to hers and make us think that it is our own. That is where the trouble lies; that is why we are drifting towards war.

It is not communism we should fear, but Britain's foreign policy.

Distaff Campaigning

By Malvina Lindsay

Women's Strategy

POLITICAL CAMPAIGNING should now become more concrete and conversational. Women, who usually lead in singling out personal and generally appealing public issues, are launching their offensives this week. The Federation of Republican Women's Clubs is meeting in Philadelphia. Democratic Women's Day, Friday, will be observed throughout the country by women's rallies.

These meetings should bring to the fore the issues that will be fought out over luncheon table and telephone, in social gathering, beauty shop, meat queue. There is, of course, no great emotionally appealing issue, as prohibition was in 1928, or the slogan, "He kept us out of war," was to the sprinkling of women voters in 1916. Also, happily, women have advanced beyond voting for candidates' wives.

The subject holding the most emotional promise to campaign cheer leaders is of course Russia. But both parties are now committed to much the same policy on that, and cleavage on international affairs runs through both groups. Republican women are not using the-Red-peril-in-government issue as vociferously as their national chairman, B. Carroll Reece, but this is likely to become a standby of feminine political discussion later, particularly in the better dressed gatherings.

DEMOCRATIC WOMEN are well wary of the Russian issue since the Wallace-Byrnes affair. They are making support of the United Nations the main theme of their Democratic Day program. But this, unlike the League of Nations, does not stir great popular enthusiasm or controversy.

Republican women, whose leaders have been traditionally wealthy and conservative, are significantly reaching out cordial hands to the working woman—who with her sisters has a potential voting strength of probably around 12 million. Her postwar problems are the subject of a forum at the Philadelphia meeting. Widely known career women in the labor field are featured in the program, as are also men national party leaders, old guard stalwarts in the main.

One side issue between Republican and Democratic women is over recognition given women by the Truman Administration. Recently, Miss Jane Todd, Republican leader, and deputy commissioner of commerce in New York State, charged in a speech that although one million more women than men were eligible to vote, yet women held "practically no Government or international positions," had no real voice in policy-making.

The women's division of the Democratic National Committee, aroused by similar charges, devoted nearly four pages of the September Democratic Digest to showing that in the first year of peace the Administration had reached more than 30 times into the ranks of women for delegates, advisers or technical assistants to international conferences, and that a large number of women occupied high bracket Government positions. Since then, the appointment of Frances Perkins to the Civil Service Commission has given the Democrats ammunition to refute the charge that no woman executive was reporting directly to the President.

THIS ISSUE, however, is not likely to stir the rank and file of women voters. High prices are a better bet, and women of both sides will make the most of these, the one charging them to strikes and Government interference, the other to the crippling of the OPA. Housing is another issue women are aroused over, and here again each side is blaming the other.

Officially, Republican women are stressing a changed deal in Government—an end to "weak leadership, confusion and contradiction in handling of labor and foreign policy," and a promise that ability and efficiency will take over. Democratic women are basing their campaign on "peace and security at home and abroad."

These words, resolved into backfence arguments, are likely to center around whether the bureaucrats or the profiteers are to blame for the scarceities of meat and sugar and for runway prices; whether bossing from Washington will stave off or bring on hard times again; and which party is most likely to end strikes, shortages and the haunting threat of war, and bring back the orderly, simple life of yesterday.

"Depression Warning"

I often wonder whether newspaper columnists do not take themselves too seriously. In trying to cover so much territory, they frequently reveal their lack of knowledge of history, economics, and other fundamental principles. The latest instance is the column of Marquis Childs in The Post of September 21, entitled "Depression Warning," in which he likens the present stock-market break as a precursor of economic trouble ahead just as it was in 1929 and 1930. If he had used the years 1920 and 1921, he would have been correct.

The differences between the years 1920-21 and 1929-30 were so fundamental that it would require too much space to discuss them here. Suffice to say that the present conditions are analogous to those in 1920, and it looks as though we may expect a one to two year depression, because economic conditions in this country now are on an unsound basis, for reasons obvious to any observant individual, some of which Childs mentions HISTORIAN.

The Federal Diary

Navy Leads in Saving Top Career Employes

NAVY: It has adopted a sweeping program to give greater job security to its two top classes of career employes.

Kluttz

This Navy plan is highly significant to all Federal workers. It sets a pattern for the entire Government service and eventually all other agencies can be expected to adopt something similar. In fact, the program will be discussed today at a meeting of the Council of Personnel Administration.

The heart of the program is this—an A-1 or A-2 employe who must be laid off from his job is given the right to take over a similar job now held by a war service or temporary employe in any other naval station or office.

In other words, the Navy has decided to force out war service people to keep its highly-skilled and experienced career employes in the department. This super-job preference is given only to A-1's—those employes who have veterans' preference, permanent Civil Service status, and who have efficiency ratings of good ar better, and to A-2's—those employes who hold permanent status, are nonvetrans, and whose efficiency ratings are good or better.

As a practical matter, the new system could work out like this: An A-1 or A-2 clerk who is laid off from headquarters here could force out and take over a similar job of a war service clerk in the Naval Research Laboratory in Anacostia. Or an A-1 or A-2 mechanic who is laid off from the Brooklyn Navy Yard could come down here and force out and take over the job of a war service mechanic at the Naval Gun Factory.

The Navy also has taken these additional steps to protect its top career people:

1. Authorized commanding officers to extend furloughs up to a year to A-1 and A-2 employes who are laid off in a reduction of force. Navy has taken the lead in this respect, too, as the maximum furlough given by any other agency is 90 days. Most agencies give only 30 days.

2. The establishment of reinstatement registers for permanent people who are laid off. Vacancies will be filled from this list and Navy won't hire from the outside so long as qualified people are available on the list.

The Navy program to protect top career people—the people who should and must be protected—follows closely the plan laid down last week by Civil Service Commissioner Arthur S. Flemming. At the convention of the American Federation of Government Employes, Flemming went further to say there was doubt in his mind if any permanent employes should be laid off if there was a war service or temporary job in any other agency which he was qualified to fill.

It's no secret that top Navy officials have become alarmed over the extent of lay-offs in shipyards. Thousands of long-time career people—people who possess the skil and know-how to build and rebuild the Navy—have been swept out of their jobs through forced reductions. In other naval activities, such as air stations, thousands of war service and temporary people are still on the rolls. The plan is designed to force top permanent people in these and other jobs.

Navy, however, makes these points clear: (1) that it has no funds to pay transportation costs of the employes to these stations; (2) that it can't guarantee length of employment; (3) that it can't guarantee housing, and (4) that the plan becomes effective immediately.

The Navy program was worked out by Undersecretary John L. Sullivan and Rear Admiral F. C. Crisp, chief of industrial relations. It's sound and it should work. If it's adopted throughout Government, we will have a career service in fact as well as in name.

WAR: It, too, is in the midst of a program to get other jobs for its permanents who have been given dismissal notices. The Budget Bureau, it was learned yesterday, has raised the October 1 personnel ceiling for the department to give it an additional 30 days in which to find other jobs for the permanents who were supposed to be fired as of next Tuesday.

FBI: The National Guard is eager to get the FBI fingerprint division out of its armory. FBI doesn't object, but it must have another building. The job to find one is Public Buildings', and not FBI's.

PBA says the Census Building, now occupied by OPA, is the only other building strong enough to hold FBI files and equipment. With the heat on, OPA may be forced out and FBI given the Census Building.

CIVIL SERVICE: Its retirement division will be forced out of its building at 7th and G sts. nw. It's slated to be moved to an old temporary structure . . . GSI: Government Services, Inc., operators of most cafeterias in Government buildings, has again raised prices on items free of OPA price controls . . . AAF: Brig. Gen. Bartlett Beaman is the new chief of civilian personnel for Army Air Forces . . . JUSTICE: Jim McGranery will resign as the Assistant to the Attorney General on October 15 to become a Federal judge in Pennsylvania.

Juvenile Crime Now Declining, Clark Declares

Baltimore, Sept. 25 .—Juvenile crime in the United States is declining but over-all statistics for the first half of 1946 show a 13 per cent increase in general crime over the corresponding period in 1945, Attorney General Tom C. Clark disclosed here last night.

He did not give figures but said that despite declining juvenile crime, arrests of persons under 18 years of age from the first half of the current year was still 18 per cent higher than in the same period of the last peacetime year, 1941.

The Attorney General reported these facts, based on a newly completed survey by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in an addres to members of the Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission.

He acknowledged that "we seem to have had some effect in deterring very young boys and girls from the paths of crime," but termed the over-all crime increase "a rather dismaying trend."

Adm. Holloway Next in Line To Head Naval Academy

Recently Helped Draft Plan to Educate Naval Officers

By the Associated Press

Read Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., who will take over as superintendent of the United States Naval Academy in January, recently headed a Navy Department board charged with development of a plan for the education of officers of the postwar Navy.

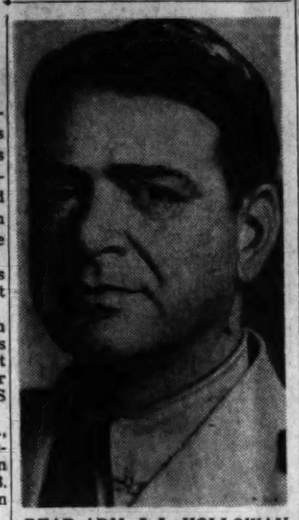
The plan, named for him, was authorized subsequently by an act of Congress.

Admiral Holloway served in both the Atlantic and Pacific theaters during the war, first on assignment with a destroyer division and later as commanding officer of the USS Iowa.

He was born at Fort Smith, Ark., on June 20, 1895, and was commissioned an ensign on his graduation from the Naval Academy in 1918. He was made a rear admiral in 1943.

While commanding officer of the Iowa, he was cited for the handling of the vessel as flagship of the commander of Battleship Division 7 in strikes off Luzon and the Japanese home islands from October, 1944, to July, 1945.

He will succeed Vice Admiral Aubrey W. Fitch, who will retire in January.



REAR ADM. J. L. HOLLOWAY

Admiral Fitch took command as superintendent and as commandant of the Severn River Naval Command in August, 1945.

Official Fired, Gas Workers Strike in Md.

Snow Hill, Md., Sept. 25 (AP).—Approximately one third of the 80 employes of the Eastern Shore Gas Corp. were off the job today in protest against the forced resignation of an assistant manager.

Maurice L. Peacock, the company's vice president, said the walkout involved tank truck drivers, service workers and installation men in the firm's headquarters at Snow Hill, and at Pocomoke City, Ocean City, Easton, Md., and Chincoteague, Va.

Peacock said the walkout followed the firm's request for the resignation of Clarence P. Richardson, former Snow Hill assistant manager.

Officials of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, AFL, Local No. 929, demanded Richardson's reinstatement, Peacock said. The company agreed, Peacock said, to reinstate Richardson if it would be permitted to submit charges of safety rules violations against him before the State Department of Labor and Industry for mediation.

Peacock said that bottled gas users would not be affected immediately, and that there would be no interruption where the company serves manufactured gas through mains.

Murder-Suicide Verdict Returned In Couple's Death

Pulaski, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—Dr. R. F. Thornhill, Pulaski County coroner, today returned a verdict of homicide and suicide in the shotgun death of a young married couple, whose bodies were found yesterday in the Bopps Wood section of the county.

Deputy Sheriff Andrew Smith identified the couple, parents of a 10-month-old daughter, as Garland Cameron, 18, and his wife, Betty Cameron, 24, residents of the Robertson tract section of the county. Smith reported that Mrs. Cameron had been shot in the back of the neck and Cameron in the head, and that a 20-gauge shotgun was found near the bodies.

Funeral services were held at 3 p. m. today for the couple.

Staunton, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—Returns from all but two of Augusta County's 37 precincts showed a vote yesterday of 1803 against substitution of the county manager or executive form of government for the present board of supervisors form, and 889 in favor of the change. U. S. Defense Must Be Ready, Denfield Says

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—The United States must be ready to defend itself "at the drop of a hat," Vice Admiral Louis E. Denfeld declared today.

"Never again can we expect to have one year, one month—or perhaps even one hour—in which to prepare for an all-out war to defend our Nation," he told students and faculty of the College of William and Mary at a ceremony formally turning over Navy barracks at St. Helena for the use of college students.

"With the development of atomic energy, jet propulsion and guided missiles we have embarked upon an age in which total war can come literally with a flash of lightning. We must be ready to defend ourselves at the drop of a hat," Denfeld continued.

"Until world-wide peace is an established reality we must maintain an Army and Navy sufficient to lend firm conviction to the voice of our statesmen at the international tables—the men who are now endeavoring to make permanent those principles of freedom for which you men fought."

Residents Set Up Fire Protection Plan at Beaches

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 25 (AP).—Year-round residents in the South and West River areas along Mayo rd. have organized a fire-control system designed to protect dwellings and other buildings at nine beaches in the neighborhood.

They set up a "fire control board" at a meeting.

The board is charged with organizing:

1. A signal force, to direct equipment and firemen to the scene of a fire.

2. Alarm men, to arouse residents and get them in the scene.

4. Ffrefighters.

The control board will have headquarters at the Woodland Beach fire department. William L. Coff, president of the Wodland Beach company, is one of the organizers of the new system.

The area embraced in the plan runs from South River, about 6 miles south of Annapolis, to Beverley Beach.

Va. Compensation Hearings Slated

Hearings are scheduled in Harrisonburg at 10 a. m. on October 17, and at Lexington at 3 p. m. In Lynchburg on October 18, the commissioner will hear cases at 9:30 a. m. and will hold an afternoon session at Charlottesville at 3 o'clock. On the last day he will conduct a hearing at Louisa at 10 a. m.

New Dispute Halts Manning Of Area Ships

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—Another work stoppage, following in the wake of recent maritime strikes, kept about 19 vessels in Baltimore idle today after the Sailors Union of the Pacific halted manning of ships.

Peter DeCatte, SUP agent in Baltimore, said instructions for the stoppage were received from San Francisco union headquarters. The reason, he said, was a dispute over a wage differential for seamen manning East Coast and West Coast ships.

While signing of men for ships was stopped yesterday, DeCatte said those who had already signed their articles would be permitted to sail their ships.

This affected but one ship here, whose crew had signed before the stop order was issued.

DeCatte said "under no circumstances" would there be any picketing in connection with the dispute.

Hampton Roads Faces Another Work Halt

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—As the effects of the strikes by unlicensed sea personnel were beginning to wear off in Hampton Roads, the port was faced today with the possibility of another maritime tieup, this time by the officers of ships whose unions are out to get them more pay.

The two unions representing the licensed deck and engine personnel, the AFL Masters, Mates and Pilots and the CIO's Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, are negotiating for the wage hikes in New York.

The Masters, Mates and Pilots, whose membership number 12,000, want a 30 per cent pay increase a closed shop and $2 an hour overtime.

The marine engineers are asking for 35 per cent wage increases, a closed shop and $2 an hour overtime. This was countered with an offer from the operators of a 10 per cent pay boost, $1.50 for overtime and continued preferential hiring.

The present pay scale ranges from $218 for fourth assistant engineers to $575 for chief engineers.

Ships in Hampton Roads under contract to the Sailors Union of the Pacific are being held up temporarily as a result of an order to halt manning the vessels.

It's All an Error, County Tells 26 Property Buyers

Towson, Md., Sept. 25 (AP).—Purchasers of 26 properties bought at Baltimore County tax sales had invitations today from the county treasurers to come around for refunds—along with an announcement that more than 600 county tax sales during the last 25 years had been conducted erroneously.

Treasurer William J. Foley said it had been the custom to make purchasers put in escrow the entire purchase price of tax sale property for a year and a day. But a ruling from the attorney general recently held that buyers were required to put up only the amount of taxes owing on the property.

Woman Reports Attack by Boy

Richmond, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—Capt. C. D. Garton, chief of city detectives, said that Mrs. Louise Zimberg, 40, was assaulted at her East-End home today and that a 17-year-old Negro was being sought on three felony warrants charging attempted rape, felonious assault with intent to kill and burglary.

Mrs. Zimberg was found with knife wounds on her arms and body and was removed, after treatment at her home, to the Medical College of Virginia Hospital, where attendants said her condition was undetermined.

The woman told police that the youth, who at one time worked for her in a store adjoining her home, broke into the house by ripping out a rear window screen. She said she saw him ride away on a girl's blue bicycle.

Frederick, Md., Sept. 25 (Spl.).—Tyler Kent, Washington, former code clerk in the American Embassy in London, who was imprisoned for allegedly providing a foreign government with secret information during the war, has purchased the two farms of Mr. and Mrs. Gerrit Peters, two miles south of Frederick.

The two properties have a combined acreage of 264 acres, including a large mansion house and complete farm buildings. Ned S. Zeiler, local realtor, said the transaction involved $67,500.

Need for USO Still Remains, Gov. Tuck Says

Quantico, Va., Sept. 25.—Governor Tuck, in a broadcast speech delivered here tonight at a USO rally, said that "although the fighting itself is over, the aftermath of war is yet with us and the need for USO is still very real."

"Ever since the USO was conceived by the churches and volunteer social organizations of the United States, the Governor of Virginia has been privileged to head the campaigns to finance its important activities.

"Under the leadership of our distinguished wartime chief executive, Governor Colgate W. Darden, jr., Virginia always did its share and more in this fine effort. Because of the leadership and great interest of Governor Darden, the job was always done well and at a fraction of the cost incurred elsewhere.

"When I came into office last January," the Governor stated, "it was my privilege to take over the reins of this worthy enterprise, and it is my earnest desire that the current USO campaign be as successful as previous ones. The President of the United States and the Secretaries of War and the Navy have requested the thousands of USO volunteers throughout the Nation to serve through 1947 in order to give the armed forces time to institute a service program to replace the excellent wartime job done by the USO. I am confident that every Virginian will want to do his share in this final effort."

Glenn Martin, U. S. Settle War Contracts

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Glenn L. Martin Co. has reached termination agreements with the Federal Government on all its war contract cancellations, totaling about 500 million dollars, it was announced today.

Glenn L. Martin, president of the aircraft manufacturing company, said the terminations were effected without disturbing the estimates in the annual report to stockholders July 26.

He also stated that the company's current backlog of busipess is 196 million dollars, an increase of 10 million dollars since the announcement August 16.

The company is employing almost 18,000 persons, which Martin said was more than the number working for any other aircraft manufacturer.

Because of the volume of secret experimental and development contracts for the Army and Navy, in addition to other research projects, the company has authorized increase of personnel in its engineering division above its present record total of 2417 up to a maximum of 3000.

Tomato Blight Loss Placed at $10,500,000

Easton, Md., Sept. 25 (AP).—The value of Maryland's tomato canning production this year will be $10,500,000 below normal because of blight, Calvin Skinner of the Tri-State Packers Association, said today.

Blight reduced the pack from an estimated 7,500,000 cases to 4,000,000. Current price is $3 a case.

Skinner said Worcester and Somerset Counties were hardest hit. Some farmers lost their entire crops.

Agricultural officials advise spraying or dusting of crops when 1947 plants appear. Protection is most important in cool, damp weather which encourages blight.

But Missed Thug

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—Wielding a meat cleaver, a 21-year-old girl last night routed a bandit who was robbing her mother's grocery store, chased him half a block up the street and hurled her weapon after him for good measure.

The young woman, Mary Block, told police later she had been summoned by her mother's scream after a tall Negro entered the store and rifled the cash register.

"I was so infuriated I didn't stop to think," the girl said, "I just wanted revenge."

As for the meat cleaver—which the unhit fugitive picked up in addition to his $50 booty — Miss Block said, "Let him have it. We don't have any meat anyway."

McKeldin Asked to Fire Drive Head

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—A request from a group of Baltimore County Republicans that Mayor McKeldin's campaign manager, I. Leland Rockwell, be fired, was before the GOP's gubernatorial candidate today.

The self-styled "Regular Republican Organization" of Baltimore County, whose chairman is John Bowling of Fullerton, explained in a statement embodying the request that Rockwell's "true role is that of a lieutenant of H. Streett Baldwin," defeated primary candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The statement expressed suspicion that filing of a slate of local GOP candidates for local offices had been intentionally delayed to avoid contesting offices in which Baldwin candidates won Democratic nomination.

"Today the Republican Party of Baltimore County lacks a complete ticket in the general election because of Mr. Rockwell," the statement complained.

Following Baldwin's primary defeat, Rockwell filed a slate of GOP candidates August 30, but the election supervisors barred them from the November ballot on the ground that their candidacies were filed too late to comply with State law.

Subsequently, the Republican State Central Committee asked for a court order requiring acceptance of these candidates.

Bruchey said Mrs. Turner confirmed the boy's statement, but that Turner, sr., at the hospital, denied that he was beating his wife.

Police said no charge had been laid against the boy.

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Anna Kaplan, 38, was in jail today to await grand jury action on a charge that she knifed and caused the death of a former Navy chief petty officer.

She pleaded innocent before Magistrate Preston A. Pairo yesterday but was ordered held without bail.

Police Lieut. Julian Forrest testified he had been called to Mrs. Kaplan's apartment September 7 and found Parker S. Spruill dead in the bedroom. Forrest said the man apparently had bled to death from a knife wound in his thigh.

Forrest said Mrs. Kaplan told him she cut the former Navy man with a paring knife when he started to choke her.

Feller Fans 10, Needs Only 7 for Record

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

A QUICK showdown that will go far toward determining who is what in college football in the Middle West is on the program for Saturday when the Notre Dame squad moves against Illinois at Champaign, Ill. Notre Dame, with Coach Frank Leahy back from the wars, is meeting in Illinois, the team that's supposed to be the hottest article in the Big Ten.

POVICH

Leahy's return to South Bend is supposed to signal the end of Notre Dame's humiliating defeats (the Irish were beaten 59-0 and 48-0 by Army the last two years), and the faith in Leahy is great. And Notre Dame's performance must also be great to hurdle the Illini, led by its phenomenal colored halfback, Buddy Young. Certainly it qualifies as the football game of the day.

Despite Leahy's laments that his Irish squad is not yet ready for a hard test, his team has a prewar flavor, especially in the backfield. His starting quarterback will be Johnny Lujack, back from three years' service in the Navy, and at fullback the Irish will present Jim Mello, also out of srevice.

Mello is the good running back who teamed with Angelo Bertelli and Creighton Miller in the prewar years when Notre Dame was knocking off both Army and Navy with ease. Lujack came along to replace Bertelli before the Army game of 1942, and at South Bend it's a raging argument whether or not Bertelli was a better passer than Understudy Lujack, who completed eight passes in the 26-0 victory over Army in '43.

Another fellow in Leahy's prewar backfield will be playing against the Irish Saturday. He is Julie Rykovitch, who rated along with Mello-Bertelli-Miller, but came out of the service to return to Illinois. Rykovitch was labeled as a second stringer at South Bend, but his performances in the Army and Navy games stamped him as a powerful kind of ball carrier, with speed, too.

The big figure of Saturday's ball game at this point, however, is Buddy Young, who for a couple of years has been acclaimed as the best college back in the country. Young rolled up 13 touchdowns as a freshman in 1944 to tie Red Grange's record output, and his two years of play with the Fleet City, Calif., sailors added luster to his reputation. He made the transition easily from track to fooball and is rated a faster back than Army's Glenn Davis.

Young is a mere 148-pounder, but the Irish remember him well, or should. In 1944, he galloped 74 yards through the Notre Dame team for a touchdown early in the game. Notre Dame won it, 13-7, but it is significant that Young was incapacitated and unable to play the second half. In Illinois' opening victory over Pitt last Saturday, Young took the ball 47 yards to a touchdown on the second play from scrimmage.

Muddy Ruel's appointment as manager of the Browns is noteworthy if only for the fact that he broke in with the Browns as an unwanted, 19-year-old catcher 20 years ago. He got a 13-game tryout, failed to make a hit in any game, and was shipped off to Memphis.

He moved up to the Yankees in 1917, but never graduated to a regular catching job and in 1921 he was traded to Boston in one of the numerous deals that stripped the Red Sox of their best talent and shunted Yankee castoffs to the Boston team. Washington got him in midseason of 1923, and a year later he was the regular catcher on the first pennant-winning Washington team.

With Washington, the battery of Johnson and Ruel attained the fame of the Johnson-Street, Johnson-Ainsmith pairs. Ruel never weighed more than 148 pounds and he was a dead pull hitter with a favorite alley down the third base line, but he hit more than .300 in three different seasons with the Nats, and it was he who scored the winning run in the 1924 World Series.

RUEL WAS the hitting flop of that World Series until the twelfth inning of the seventh game. He had made only one hit in the previous six games and was batting .098 when the big break came. At bat in the twelfth, he raised a high pop foul over the plate and apparently was an easy out, but Catcher Hank Gowdy of the Giants, who had flipped off his mask at the sound of the foul ball, came a cropper. Gowdy stepped on his mask at the moment he was catching the ball, fell in a heap and dropped it for an error.

Thus reprieved, Ruel banged the next pitch down the third base line for a double to put the winning run on base. A moment later he scored with the run that broke up the series, on Earl McNeely's famous pebble hit that took a freak hop over the head of Third Baseman Freddie Lindstrom, poised to field it.

Ruel, like most catchers, was not a fast man on the bases, and Clark Griffith to this day declares "the longest moment of my life was when I was watching Ruel plodding from second to home with the run that beat the Giants. I was running every step with him, and at my age I wasn't fast any more."

Nats Win 2; Macks Pull Triple Play

Philadelphia, Sept. 25.—The Nats increased their fourth-place lead over the Chicago White Cox to 1½ games by taking both ends of a double-header from the Athletics, 6-3 and 7-4 before a meager crowd of 3881 today at Shibe Park.

Roger Wolff won the opener, featured by a triple play pulled off by the A's in the seventh inning, and Dutch Leonard, with some able relief pitching from Milo Candini, triumphed in the afterpiece.

Mickey Vernon, the league leading hitter, collected his 200th hit of the season in the third inning of the opener and his four hits in nine times at bat during the afternoon hiked hsi average to .357.

Spence on Hitting Spree

Hitting honors for the day, however, went to Stan Spence, who had two hits in the opener and chipped in with three doubles and a single in the second.

The Nats sewed up the first game with a single tally in the second inning and three more in the third. The A's couldn't score until after two were out in the eighth.

Joe Grace led off the Senators' seventh inning with a single to center, his third hit of the game, and rode home on Vernon's double to left. After Spence singled, Cecil Travis hit to Richmond at third. Richmond threw to Oscar Grimes, forcing Spence at second for the first out of the ensuing triple play. Seeing Vernon break for home, Grimes threw to Catcher Joe Astroth and Vernon was run down between third and home. Richmond, who made the putout on Vernon then pegged to Jack Wallaesa and Travis was nabbed sliding into second.

Nats Take Lead

The Senators started the second game with two runs in the first inning off Luther Knerr on Buddy Lewis' bunt single, Vernon's double to left and another two-bagger to the same spot by Spence.

Richmond's error on Vernon's grounder and Spence's second double gave the Senators another run in the fifth, but the A's came back in the same frame to deadlock the score again.

The Nats broke through for two runs in the sixth on singles by Al Evans and Billy Hitchcock, a sacrifice by Leonard, and Buddy Lewis' pop fly double to left. They drove Knerr from the box in the seventh with another two-run surge, Hitchcock's single scoring both men. Bill McCahan and Joe Coleman finished up for the Mackmen.

Suggs, Kirby Upset Victims

Tulsa, Okla., Sept. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Babe Didrikson Zaharias of Denver, Colo., was the only pretournament favorite around for the second tee-off in the National Women's Amateur Golf Classic late today after a series of upsets that saw Louise Suggs and Dorothy Kirby, both of Atlanta, Ga., eliminated in opening matches.

Miss Kirby, who won medal honors with a 36-hole 2-over-par 152, went down before little known Grace Lenczyk, a deadly swinging blonde from Newington, Conn., 4 and 3, while Miss Suggs bowed out in a spectacular nineteenth hole finish with Mrs. Dan Chandler of Dallas, Tex., 1 up.

Mrs. Zaharias whipped Miss Peggy Kirk of Findlay, Ohio, 4 and 3.

Mrs. Zaharias had an unofficial 2-under-par 73, two strokes better than the competitive course record for women, set by Patty Berg five years ago.

Larkin-Fusari Signed

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—Tippy Larkin of Garfield, N. J., and Charles Fusari, Irvington, N. J., wetlerweight who is unbeaten in 45 professional bouts, agreed to terms today for a 10-round bout in Madison Square Garden Friday, December 13.

Vernon Gets Four for Nine

The Nats' Mickey Vernon, in his quest for the American League batting championship, collected four hits in nine trips in a double-header against the Philadelphia A's yesterday to boost his average to .357.

Vernon's closest rival, the Red Sox's Ted Williams, went hitless in three trips, his batting mark falling three points to .339. Detroit's Hank Greenberg hit another home run yesterday, his forty-second, to lead Williams by four round trips.

Stymie Whips Assault in Belmont 'Cap

New York, Sept. 25 (AP).—Assault stepped up among the big boys today, making his first start against older horses, and got himself well whipped by the greatest turf bargain of all time, the reformed selling-plater, Stymie.

The 3-year-old triple-crown champion not only failed to win, but missed second place, too, and just got up to a head heat for third with Flareback as his fellow-Texan came sizzling up the stretch as usual to take the Manhattan Handicap at Belmont.

And with the victory, the 5-year-old Stymie, who cost Hirsch Jacobs, the Brooklyn pigeon fancier, just $1500 back in 1943, became the third horse in all turf history to skyrocket his bankroll over the $400,000 mark. He picked up a $20,050 paycheck for this mile-and-a-half meander for a total bank account of $411,035 in his four seasons of racing.

Only Two in Front of Him

This put him more solidly than ever in third place on racing's all-time world money-winning list, with only Whirlaway and Seabiscuit in front of him, and the Biscuit just $26,695 away at that.

For Assault, bowing into the big league of handicap horses after taking hte Kentucky Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont and assorted other affairs in his own set, the effort just showed that he was in over his head. Stymie paid $4.20.

Pavot Is Second

Pavot, after fighting off Bounding Home and Petrol Point in the early going, held on to carry his 121-pound load home in second place, half a length back of the driving Stymie.

For Pavot it meant a $5000 second-money jackpot, lifting his earnings to $345,115, and moving him into eighth place among the turf's bankroll boys.

Assault and Flareback each got $1875 for their third-place deadlock.

Assault's earnings now are $369,845, including the $4500 nominators' awards he collected in the Preakness and Belmont, and left him in seventh place on the money-winning list.

With all of the three first choices in the money, the payoff for show was $2.10 for each.

A Shaughnessy Prediction—Wow..

Baltimore, Sept. 25 (AP).—The University fo Maryland's 1946 football opponents had it from Coach Clark Shaughneesy today—noone, the T-formation savant predicted, would push his Terrapins around.

To this claim of Maryland strength, the mentor, speaking at a Maryland Club luncheon yesterday, added another prediction:

"This will probably be the best year in the history of the United States college football," he said.

Baltimoreans, incidentally, may expect to see more of Maryland teams in the future. The Terps are planning to book one or more games for Baltimore in coming years, Geary (Swede) Eppley, Maryland director of athletics, disclosed.

There was a possibility, too, that the Maryland-Washington and Lee game, scheduled for College Park November 16, may be shifted to the Baltimore Municipal Stadium, Eppley said.

Wounded Get Redskin Tickets

WOUNDED WAR veterans, patients at Walter Reed and Bethesda Naval Hospital, gleefully display 210 books of season tickets to the Redskin home games, with Charles Rosenthal making the presentation. The tickets are the gift of Mr. Rosenthal, Washington sportsman, and his friends who annually buy season books for distribution to the war wounded

Fireballer Bows, 4-1, To Chisox

Cleveland, Sept. 25 (AP).—Bob Feller moved into a commanding position in his bid to surpass Rube Waddell's listed strikeout record of 343, fanning 10 Chicago White Sox to boost his season total to 3:37. The Sox beat the Cleveland Indians 4 to 1, with Joe Haynes allowing five hits and Feller four.

Needing only seven more strikeouts to set a new mark, Feller is scheduled to hurl portions of the games against the Detroit Tigers Friday and Saturday and the full game against the Bengals Sunday.

The Indians' final home game of the season was a free-gate affair presented by President Bill Veeck and drew 12,800 fans.

Feller fanned every batter in the Sox lineup except Outfielder Dave Philley and his old battery mate, Frankie Hayes. He whiffed Joe Kuhel, Cass Michaels and Thurman Tucker twice, and struck out the side in the seventh.

'If You Can't Help Us, Don't Help Cards,' Bum Fans Pray

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 25 (U.P.).—Brooklyn got down on its knees today and prayed for the pennant.

The Rev. Bennay J. F. Benson, kneeling on the steps of Borough Hall, asked the Lord to give the Bums "an even break." That was all they needed, he told the 200 persons in front of the building. They seemed to think so, too.

"If the Lord gives Brooklyn an even break, they're good enough to win," he said.

Six hours after the prayer was ended the final score of today's Brooklyn game was posted: Brooklyn, 9; Philadelphia, 11.

Mr. Benson is pastor of the Brooklyn Dutch Reformed Church. He's a real Brooklynite. He was born in Brooklyn, Iowa.

Today he was all Brooklyn, N. Y. He was a church-going, hymn-singing, prayer-chanting Dodger Rooter, just asking the Lord to give the Bums an even break. He kneeled down on the stone steps of Borough Hall and he started to pray.

"O, Lord, we're praying for those Dodgers," he said fervently. "Their chances don't look so good right now. Everybody is praying for the Bums to win.

"O, Lord, give, we pray, give to the Dodgers an even chance to win the pennant; like the man in the woods who is crossing the stream on a fallen tree trunk, who met a bear in the middle, coming his way—'O, Lord,' he prayed, 'I only ask if you don't help me, don't help the bear either.

"We ask you not to give the Anheusers out there in St. Louis any better break than you give us and we ask this in all sincerity. Amen."

"Amen," came from the crowd.

A reporter asked Mr. Benson what the rest of the clergymen in Brooklyn thought about his pennant prayer.

"They gave me the double E," he said.

"What's the double E?"

"The envious eyebrow."

"People pray for so many things these days I see nothing wrong in praying for something so normal as victory for the Dodgers," he said.

So he'll pray in public again tomorrow. Pray for an even break for the Bums. Pray for a pennant for Brooklyn.

Servo Quits; Gives UpTitle

New York, Sept. 25 (U.P.).—Welterweight Champion Marty Servo retired from the ring today because of an injured nose. He gave up the crown for which he had "paid" $50,000 without making a single defense.

The National Boxing Association and the New York Commission immediately designated Ray (Sugar) Robinson and Beau Jack as the pair to fight for the vacant title.

Servo of Schenectady, N. Y., not quite 25, won the world championship from Freddie (Red) Cochrane on February 1, after guaranteeing Cochrane $50,000 for making the defense. Servo never defended his 147-pound diadem because of recurrent nose injuries. As a result of this failure, the New York Commission vacated his title on September 3. The N. B. A., however, continued to recognize him as champion.

The N. B. A.'s continuance of reecognition was dependent upon Servo's promise to defend against Sugar Robinson, the No. 1 challenger, before December 1, and th eN. B. A. was demanding that Servo post a forfeit of $10,000 by October 1 to guarantee this defense.

Servo was confronted with the alternatives of (1) putting up the $10,000 forfeit and risking permanent injury to his nose, or (2) retiring in good health.

Manager Al Weill insisted that Servo retire because "the nose is in such condition that a hard blow on it might cause injury to Marty's brain."

Bosox Top Yanks, 5-2

Boston, Sept. 25 (AP).—Pitching one of his best games, Joe Dobson turned in a four-hitter today for a 5-2 verdict over Clarence Marshall and the New York Yankees, as the Boston Red Sox registered their 103d victory and finished competition against the Bronxites for the year, with 14 won out of 22.

It was Dobson's thirteenth success against six lost. His single in the fourth knocked Marshall from the mound, and drove in a run, while his catcher, Roy Partee, whacked in three counters with a double and a triple.

Truman Given Pro Grid Pass

By the Associated Press

No President of the United States ever has attended a professional football game, but George Preston Marshall hatched a scheme today that may change all that.

Armed with a gold-plated pass, Marshall, owner of the Washington Redskins, and Bert Bell, commissioner of the National Football League, dropped in on President Truman.

The pass, for the President "and party," will let Mr. Truman in to any league game.

It was the second presidential pass the National Leaguers have issued this year. The first one was filched, along with a few other knicknacks, by a thief who raided the New York office.

Bert told reporters he went through the customary chitchat with the President. Bell hoped Mr. Truman would attend some games. Mr. Truman said, well, he'd like to at that. But, no he gave no promises.

Quantico Faces Monroe Eleven

Quantico, Va., Sept. 23.—The Quantico Marines are preparing for their Saturday tilt with Fort Monroe. Refusing to let their two defeats thus far dampen their spirit, the Marines are confident that they'll break into the win column.

With Dove, Stith, Bryson and Foreman passing and Evans, Foos, Petros and Wood receiving, Coach Shofner hopes to score his initial victory of the season.

Cards' Infield Is Secret of Success

By the Associated Press

The bulwark that has enabled the St. Louis Cardinals to stick in the National League flag race despite a series of unhappy experiences, including raids by the Mexican League, is a stanch, tightly knit infield that gives away very few runs and provides the club with a great deal of its punch.

If the Redbird quartet finds itself in the World Series next week, it will suffer very little by comparison with the set of sluggers who helped the Boston Red Sox make a runaway of the American League, even though the latter group includes two such fearsome swatters as Johnny Pesky and Bobby Doerr.

After all, the Card infield contains the National League's (and maybe baseball's) greatest hitter in First Baseman Stan Musial (.368); the league's best third baseman in Whitey Kurowski (.302), and the long stringbean who for some seasons has been known as "Mr. Shortstop," Marty Marion.

Against this fine trio the Red Sox offer the game's outstanding second baseman in Doerr, who has knocked across 115 runs through Tuesday's games on a sticking average of .272, and the stocky little Pesky, who still is clouting a terrific .337, has made 203 hits—more than any other player on the Sox team—and has fielded his position to match.

Brooklyn, clinging tenaciously to its chance at the big playoff, boasts only one infield star of acknowledged magnitude, Shortstop Peewee Reese, and he is about as good as they come. Dodger fans will die swearing that their second baseman, Eddie Stanky, is the best in the world, but they might be accused of prejudice. At first and third the Flock is little better than minor league.

Taking the three clubs spot by spot, Musial looms as a standout at first, providing the National League pitchers operate with due caution against big Rudy York, the Sox veteran who has made perhaps the year's greatest comeback.

Thirty pounds lighter, Rudy has powdered the ball all year, and though his average is only a modest-appearing .286, he has slammed 53 extra-base blows, including 16 home runs, and has knocked in 118 runs, only three fewer than his vaunted teammate, Ted Williams.

Should Brooklyn squeeze in, tall Howie Schultz (.242) and Ed Stevens' (.239) probably would split up the first-basing duties, as they have all season.

Doerr gets the call at second over either Red Schoendienst of the Cards or Stanky of the Brooks.

Even though most baseball men will say that Marty Marion still can go farther to get a ball than any shortstop living, it is necessary to string along with Pesky for the purposes of a world series, where one extra hit can make all the difference between hauling down the winners' share and merely being voted a good loser.

Reese of the Dodgers always is dangerous at the dish and has contributed much to his club's attack with a .283 average. Marion, tired and underweight, has had a very poor year at the plate, but he still can knock down those balls that look like sure hits and turn them into double plays.

Though he got a slow start after an extended holdout, Kurowski gradually has clubbed his way back to the leadership of the third-base men, and his lusty bat gives the Cards that much-needed third .300 hitter in their line-up.

Whitey figures to out-shine either of the pair who have been sharing the hot corner for the Red Sox, Pinky Higgins and Rip Russell.

The Dodgers at one time or another have tried everybody except Branch Rickey at third. Cookie Lavagetto, hitting .240, probably would be Durocher's choice in the series.

Mrs. Priddy Wins by 3 Up

Staunton, Va., Sept. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Clara Priddy, 1930 women's State golf champion, laid a 60-foot approach shot to within two feet of the cup on the eighteenth green and then sank the putt to edge Mrs. C. G. Quesenbery, 1 up today in a hectic see-saw quarter finals match in the twenty-first annual Virginia State Women's golf championship tournament.

Both women are from the Farmington Country Club, Charlottesville.

Today's other quarterfinal matches also had storybook finishes.

Mrs. R. C. Hockaday, of the James River Country Club, Newport News, beat Mrs. C. B. Walden, of the Country Club of Virginia, Richmond, 1 up on the twentieth.

Mrs. H. N. Allen, of the James River Club, came through and trimmed Mrs. E. J. Keffer, Roanoke city champion, 2 and 1.

DODGERS

Judd, ended that with a third-inning inside-the-park home run. The ball angled off the right center wall away from Walker like a trick shot in a billiard parlor.

Rookie Del Ennis of the Phils was sent to a hospital after being struck on the wrist by a pitched ball. A total of 35 players, 19 for the Dodgers and 16 for the Phils, paraded into the game and 20 men were left on bases, 13 of them Dodgers.

North Carolina State Has Confidence Despite Rugged Slate

Spanish Uhl Chalks Up Third in Row

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Marlboro, Md., Sept. 25.—Morris Prickett's Spanish Uhl won the handicap championship of the Marlboro meeting by galloping to his third victory in as many tries over the half-mile oval. Under Jockey Danny Scocca's handling, the 5-year-old took the top at the first tingle of the starting bell and was still there with distance to spare at the end of the feature race, the Chesapeake Beach Handicap.

Mrs. C. Bowers' Aldridge followed Spanish Uhl to the wire ahead of Walter Mountain's Alhalon. A field of seven competed in the test of a mile and three-sixteenths. The track was drying out after yesterday's downpour. However, the sky was cloudless and some 8000 reported for the valedictory program of the hectic half-mile season.

Spanish Uhl Pays $5

Spanish Uhl, despite an impost of 120 pounds, was installed the favorite and rewarded his legion of followers with a $5 mutuel.

Rex-Avis and Alhalon were the chief chasers of Spanish Uhl in the early running. The second time around the tarck, Rex-Avis faltered and Red Wrack tried to move through on the inside. The veteran, however, stumbled and all but went down. Then Aldridge rallied and closed boldly, but too late to threaten the fleet Spanish Uhl.

Fleetest, owned and trained by Norman Corbin of Washington, won the Mount Vernon Purse, the day's secondary feature. Jockey Lamar Bauer brought the mare from behind to win going away from E. B. Lee's Looter, the pacemaker virtually all the way. Mrs. J. B. Hatfield's Cherrydale was third in the field of eight going five and a half furlongs. Fleetest paid $7.70 for $2.

Gallant Rube Returns $114.70

From a monetary angle the high point of the day was a $114.70 mutuel paid by E. A. Nicodemus' Gallant Rube. This 3-year-old developed a sudden stretch punch and won with daylight to spare over seven rivals in the third race.

The daily double paid $21.30. Jockey Johnny Tammaro, leading rider at the meeting, took the first race with I. G. Schorsch's Kapmec at $5.90, while Mike Sarno booted A. S. Moore's Rippleby home at $6.80 in the second event.

Duke Is Foe In Opener On Saturday

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 25.—Three days before the Duke-N. C. State game which opens 1946 football in this grid-mad town there's a surprising amount of confidence on the State campus.

The "littlest" of what Raleigh natives familiarly call the big four (State has "only" 4500 students at a school normally handling 2200) matter of fact, and sneering right back at big-time Duke, North Carolina and Wake Forest.

A 1-4 underdog in the Duke game Saturday, and with a 10-game schedule lacking a single breather ahead, Coach Beattie Feathers and his staff still predict a .500 season for the Wolfpack.

Here's How It's Done

"We can score against almost anybody," the former Tennessee and professional great says, "and in a case like that anything can happen. We may lost to Duke, Clemson, Wake Forest, Vanderbilt, Virginia and Florida, but we can whip Davidson, VPI, VMI and Maryland. Thus all we need is one really good upset for a .500 season. And nobody's going to shove us around . . ."

Editor's Note: This is another in a series of stories by experienced Post football writers on prospects at schools in this area. Others will follow daily.

North Carolina State's bright outlook for the football season has been gained despite the realization by most State supporters that the school shouldn't be considered in the same league with many of its Southern Conference rivals. Minus a physical education department, which would make it easier for some athletes to get through school, and forced to use C-average students on its team, the Wolfpack has never-the-less come up with what may be its best team in years. The big trouble may be that other schools also will be improved, and in spades.

Weak at Center

Coach Feathers, who will field a deceptive combination of the single wing and T-formatoin, has only one really weak spot. That's at center, where four freshmen are wrangling over the starting berth. Otherwise he calls himself three-deep at tackle and end, two-deep everywhere else except at tailback, where he's no less than five-deep.

Topping the whole dish, like a cherry on a Sundae, is little but terrific Howard "Peewee" Turner, the Wolfpack's leading tailback and a triple-threater. After three brilliant years, in two of which he was all-Conference, Turner is slated for even greater stardom than last season when he average 5.9 yards rushing, 39 yards kicking and completed 60 per cent of his passes.

Ran 105 Yards For Score

The 165-pound senior, rejected four times by his draft board for a defective left eye, probably featured his college career in 1945 by running an interceted Duke pass 105 yards for a touchdown. In that game he sparked a stand that held Duke to a 26-13 victory after a bitter struggle.

Four capable replacements are ready to take Turner's place—Gwyn Fletcher, Charlie, Charlie Richkus, Ogden Smith and John Adamiec—but none is likely to steal the show from the Rocky Mount lad.

Liquor Served at Stockholm U., Says Student Here on Survey

Swedish Prober Will Suggest Smorgasbord In School Cafeterias

BORGE LANGENDORF

Smorgasbord is fine, but if Borge (Larry) Langendorf has his way Swedish university cafeterias will be serving it cafeteria style.

Langendorf is in the District as an official representative of the University of Stockholm to see how George Washington University operates.

The tall, blond, blue-eyed Swedish boy, who is president of the student council at Stockholm, is making Washington his last inspection point in a three-month tour of American educational institutions.

Favors Special Courses

Another thing Larry thinks he will recommend to Swedish universities is that they add specialized courses such as journalism. This, of course, was said to a Post reporter.

Although he had been subjected to many years of American films, Larry found America quite different from the gangster and night club atmospheres they showed.

Colleges Much Alike

On the whole he found great similarities between American and Swedish universities, he said. Two important exceptions were of interest to all of the American university representatives with whom the Swedish emissary talked.

He told them that in his university, hard liquor was served in the student recreation buildings, as well as other drinks. The other difference was that the Swedish school has a curriculum board which meets with the faculty twice a year to make suggestions and exchange views on courses.

"Several times we have forced them to retreat," Larry noted.

Kremlin Spoils Stalin Newsbeat For London Paper

London, Sept. 25 (AP).—The Kremlin's method of handling replies by Prime Minister Stalin to queries from newsmen left the Sunday Times of London in the lurch journalistically.

Alexander Werth, the Sunday Times' correspondent in Moscow, asked Stalin nine questions about international affairs and Stalin answered them.

But the Moscow radio and the official Soviet news agency Tass distributed the full text of Werth's questions and Stalin's replies today, five days before the Sunday Times will get a chance to publish them.

Woman Asks What's Wrong With the World Today, That Persons in So-Called Good Society Think It Chic to Indulge in Ribald, Pagan Behavior

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Speaking as one woman to another, I wish to express my admiration of your fine intelligence. Coming from a member of your own sex, that's a real compliment, don't you think?

Now tell me, please, what in your opinion is wrong with the manners and morals of people today? It seems that ribald and lecherous thought, speech and behavior is the general rule; and, in fact, considered chic in so-called good society today.

For example, recently while visiting friends I found myself in a party of several women, and the host on that occasion seemed to think it quite the thing to maul the ladies, make risque remarks and generally deport himself like an oaf. I know his wife was hurt and humiliated by his performance,—as I most certainly would have been if he were my husband, which thank heaven he isn't.

Finds the Trend Very Disturbing

IN FACT, if he were my husband, I would have spoken my mind then and there, regardless of guests. And I think this is where a great many women are making a mistake,—namely, in trying to carry off such situations in a matter-of-fact way. Seems to me this offensive behavior is becoming quite a habit with men today; seems, also, that they think "stepping out" is just one of those things a wife is supposed to endure. "Take it or leave it," is their attitude.

Believe me, the trend is really disturbing. Recently a friend of my husband's remarked to him in my presence: "I'm taking out one of the babes in the office tonight. What's the matter with you? Don't you like a change now and then?" Fancy my feelings! What under heavens is going to become of the sacramental institution of marriage at the rate things are going? Please state your opinions. A. D.

Cause Goes Back To Ignorant Fear

DEAR A. O.: The behavior of which you speak is a manifestation of anxiety and ignorance, also of spiritual sterility, on the part of men and women who indulge it. All are afraid that the physical charms of their youth,—such as they ever had,—are withering away as the years pass; and they suppose that sex appeal is the alpha and omega of personal magnetism.

The man who plays satyr in company under his wife's humiliated gaze is struggling to deny their mutual awareness that he is a washout in the role of lover-husband-companion to her. The same is true of the married man who "takes out a babe" for variety. These men are engaged in flight from reality. Neither is willing to face the facts of his own deficiencies on the score of being, because neither is willing to undertake the major assignment of being, namely,—growth in spiritual perception and moral stature.

Yet here is the only road,—though strait the gate and narrow the way,—that leads to consistently exhilarating experience as the years roll by. And this is the only way of living that steadily enhances a person's charm, poise, peace of mind and total attractiveness to every comer.

Craven Women Crucify Good

YOU are absolutely right in thinking women make a great mistake when they assume a passive, conciliatory or accommodating air towards pagan deportment or bawdy levity. Claude Bragdon, whose writings are respected by scholars in the field of metaphysics, profoundly argues the same conclusion in a small book entitled, "Delphic Women."

He cites observations to convince the reader that women crucify the good in themselves to no purpose, and indeed betray men's deepest need of spiritual succor,—thereby depleting the moral health of the whole human race,—when they give craven countenance to such mutually degrading behavior. Doubtless the book is out of print, but if you can find a copy, read it. I'm sure you would find it intensely interesting,—and also a guide to spiritually successful administration of your married life. M. H.

Twentieth Century Head Takes A Prize—At Cake or Charities

This is another in a series of articles introducing the club presidents of Washington and vicinity.

By Genevieve Reynolds

TALL, erect Mrs. Geoffrey Creyke, new president of Twentieth Century Club, looks and acts the part of a born leader. A ready smile, infinite tact and a businesslike brain have put and kept her at the top of many organizations.

For instance, Alice Creyke's name and DAR are synonymous. She has held practically every chapter office in the Susan Riviere Hetsel branch, moving on to vice and then State regent, and national program chairman for three Continental Congresses. At present she is vice president, general and national organizing secretary for Children of the American Revolution.

In Twentieth Century Club, she has served as corresponding secretary, second and first vice presidents as well as director. She also served as vice chairman of the Chevy Chase branch of the YWCA, was active in the Hathaway Shakespeare Club of Philadelphia, the local PT-A and was vice president of Chapter L of PEO.

Brown-eyed and energetic, Mrs. Creyke worked diligently for the Red Cross during both World Wars. As chairman of the Chevy Chase Red Cross branch during the first conflict, she held the rank of major and christened the tanker Conshohocken at Chester, Pa.

WHILE she was State regent of the DAR in War II, the Red Cross and National Defense Committees which she appointed donated a mobile blood donor unit, two clubmobiles, furnished nine recreation rooms for service people and gave $11,408 in cash as one year's service. In recognition of such contributions, a Red Cross workroom at the Webster School and an entrance to the Kate Duncan Smith DAR have been dedicated to Mrs. Creyke, as was a room at Tamassee DAR school.

How does the youthful-looking, silvery-haired grandmother accomplish so much? "I plan ahead and budget my time," she answers. Planning, of course, means household chores and cooking as well as organizational activities. For, like hundreds of other homemakers, she had no help during the war.

Born in Farmville, Va., she was graduated from State Teachers' College as salutatorian. But honors even then were nothing new for this busy woman—she had received her first prize for a cake at a County fair when only 11. Her cakes still are the envy of her many friends.

Mrs. Creyke's chief hobbies are people, flowers, music, hats and poetry. Her pet abominations: long-drawn-out business meetings and long-winded introductions. "Business sessions should be brief and business-like," she insists.

She has a large, varied collection of recipes and likes nothing better than preparing a party for friends.

AS FOR future plans of Twentieth Century Club, Mrs. Creyke says she and the group will continue to fight for District suffrage and emphasize the group's well-established philanthropic and civic activities. She also expects to reemphasize world relations.

Twentieth Century Club, with approximately 500 members, always has a long waiting list. One of the Capital's outstanding organizations, it boasts many native-born and long-time District residents. Mrs. Creyke has lived here since her marriage to British-born Geoffrey Creyke about 35 years ago. The two Creyke sons, Geoffrey, jr., and Richard Paulett, are well known in younger circles. Geoffrey practices law and Richard is a writer for the films division of a slick magazine. Both recently were discharged from the Armed Services.

Jones—Haller Nuptials Read In Chevy Chase

Palms, white chrysanthemums and candelabra decorated Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church last night for the wedding of Miss Frances Anne Haller, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Herbert L. J. Haller, this city, and Jean Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Riley Jones, Little Rock, Ark. The Rev. J. Hillman Hollister officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white satin with marquisette overskirt and fingertip veil falling from a coronet of braided net. She carried gardenias and stephanotis. Her attendants, Miss Barbara Ann Hicks and Miss Louise Dudley Vance, wore white taffeta with delphinium and red roses. The bridegroom's father acted as best man. Ushers were Paul Jones, Herbert Andrew Haller and Warren Clark.

Following a reception at the Wardman Park, the newlyweds left for the mountains. They will reside in Washington. The bride, a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, attended University of North Carolina and was graduated from University of Maryland. Mr. Jones attended the engineering school of George Washington. He is a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

SPANISH is the main language of Puerto Rico; less than 30 per cent of the people speak English.

Dillon—Valentine

The marriage of Miss Eleanor Lee Valentine, Charlottesville, Va., to Joseph Francis Dillon, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Dillon, Arlington, took place September 21 in University of Virginia Chapel, Charlottesville. Officiating was the Rev. William H. Laird. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white satin and net, her net veil held with a bandeau of orange blossoms. She carried gardenias and roses.

Mrs. Wade Menefee, matron of honor, wore white net and carried red gladioli and white roses. Bridesmaids Marjorie Ann Chambers and Nellie Gray Gooch also wore white net with muffs of red gladioli and white delphinium. Dr. William E. Carter served as best man. Ushers were William R. DeVallinger and Dr. Paul Stonesifer.

A reception followed at Alumni Hall and the newlyweds left afterward for Canada. They will reside in Charlottesville, where the bridegroom is studying for his Ph.D. Mr. Dillon, a former Navy lieutenant, is a graduate of University of Virginia and a member of Phi Beta Kappa. The bride attended Mary Washington College.

Weiss—Barker

Dr. and Mrs. Elmer Eugene Barker announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Louise, to Leonard Weiss, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Weiss, Chicago. The ceremony took place in Washington September 21. After October 5 the couple will reside at 2231 California st. nw.

Your Questions On Homemaking

Please tell me how to make stewed tomatoes from a can of tomatoes. I haven't been able to get that smooth, jellied effect from the recipes I have tried so far. B. S. M.

I can't determine from your letter whether you are attempting to prepare stewed tomatoes thickened with flour or an aspic. If it's thick, smooth, stewed tomatoes you're making, you'll find that the addition of a thin paste of flour and water, stirred in slowly and then cooked, will achieve the result. However, if it's a jellied, or aspic tomato dish you're looking for, then follow an aspic recipe calling for gelatin.

My waffle iron was allowed to get too hot and after cleaning it, the waffles stuck. Now it must be cleaned and seasoned again. Could you please tell me how to do this? C. R. B.

Use slightly dampened steel wool to remove the burned batter. Brush out all crumbs and reseason—like this: Apply a thin film of melted, unsalted fat to the grids. Close the baker and turn on the current at low heat. Heat about 3 minutes. Wipe off any excess fat with paper toweling. Leave the baker open until the grids are cool.

How can I remove shine from the back of a dark blue wool gabardine skirt? I. A. V. T.

Wet a piece of cheesecloth in acetic acid and rub the shiny cloth with it. Ordinary vinegar contains enough acetic acid to do a good job. Hang the garment outside to banish the odor of the acid and press with pressing cloth. Brush skirt while still damp.

How can I clean gilt and gold leaf picture frames? How should an oil painting be cleaned? What can I do to repair the arm of a chair that has broken off? A. R. C.

Treat gilt and golf-leaf frames gently. Moisten a pad of cheesecloth with a solution made of equal parts of ammonia and denatured alcohol. Apply to a small area of the frame with the least possible pressure. Use a dry pad to take up the soil, then proceed to the next area. Once or twice a year pat a little lemon oil gently on the gilt to keep it from drying and cracking.

If the arm has merely come loose, you can reglue it. If, however, it has broken in two pieces, you'll need an expert to redowel the pieces or make you an entire new arm.

If the oil paintings are valuable, by all means take them to a professional for cleaning. Home remedies are rarely successful. If your courage is high, however, you might try this: Dip a wad of cotton in turpentine and rub it very lightly over the surface, then varnish with a special varnish sold in artist's supply stores.

I love my Texas

I love my State of Texas with . . . Her dusty, idle plains . . . The winds that kiss the cotton and . . . The wild, torrential rains . . . Her famous, fertile Valley and . . . The Rio Grande too . . . And I am happy in my heart . . . When all her skies are blue . . . I love her lonely highways and . . . Her cities tall and clean . . . Where sun-tanned smiles in silence say . . . What handshakes really mean . . . I wander in a garden where . . . Blue bonnets raise their heads . . . And where the roses redolent . . . Are blooming in their beds . . . And when the Texas stars appear . . . Wherever cowboys roam . . . My dreams have all come true because . . . I know that I am home.

"A work which ranks with the leading historical documents of our time." Walker M. Towns, in the Free Methodist.
"This vigorous book . . . challenges the justice and humanity of the entire family of nations as no other book known to this reviewer." Father Joseph N. Moody, Professor of History, Cathedral College, New York City.

THIS dramatic, brilliant study is written by one of the world's distinguished authorities on foreign affairs. It is a story of intrigue, of heartbreak, of great accomplishment, and of power politics at its worst.

To Americans, badly confused by incessant propaganda, this book turns the spotlight of truth on one of the gravest problems before the world today.

Read the startling truth of what is taking place in the Holy Land. Are Americans being hoodwinked and misled for the advantage of others; and where do American interests lie? These questions are authoritatively answered in this great book.

Endorsed by foremost Americans of all denominations.

"This book is an eye opener."

WILLIAM GREEN
President,
American Federation of Labor

"It is a monumental book."

REV. HOWARD J. CHIDLEY
First Congregational Church
Winchester, Mass.

"This is a historical document of first class importance."

REV. JOHN HAYN HOLMES
Community Church of New York

"This book should be read by all those in responsible positions in American public affairs who are interested in the foreign scene."

H. STYLES BRIDGES
U. S. Senator, N. H.

"A factual and excellently documented analysis of the entire problem."

PROF. FRANCIS J. BROWN
American Academy of Political and Social Science

"It is difficult to answer, if not impossible. One would suppose that the book would become a prescribed text for all people wishing to speak with authority and clarity upon the Jew of today."

REV. AMBROSE M. BAILEY
First United Baptist Church
Lowell, Mass.

"I defy anyone to read him without granting the soundness of his main thesis."

H. L. MENCKEN

"The author writes with the precision of a historian, but with the ease of a natural story teller. No educator of youth or teacher of religion can afford to be without the pertinent facts the book presents so beautifully and positively."

REV. CHAS. HADDON NABERS
Union Seminary Review
Richmond, Va.

"It is very difficult to get facts in these days. Our sources of information are so confused and distorted that we find it difficult to think clearly even when we want to do so. This book ought to do a great deal to clear the air."

REV. JOSEPH FORT NEWTON
Church of St. Luke and The Epiphany
Philadelphia, Pa.
